

Remove Scorch Spots From Cotton Fabric

Spring brings an added load of cottons in the weekly ironing and even the most experienced ironer may leave a scorch once in a while. Mrs. Marjorie Lusk, Extension Clothing Specialist, says the best way to remove that offending brown spot from washable cotton and linen is to wet the spot with water and expose it to the sun as long as necessary. With any white fabric you may dampen a white cotton cloth with hydrogen peroxide and place over the stain. Place a clean, dry cloth over it and then press with a medium warm iron, DO NOT iron directly on the cloth moistened with peroxide, says Mrs. Lusk. Rust stains on the garment would be the result. Do not use full strength on silks or wools.

STORAGE TIPS ON VEGETABLES

STATE HORTICULTURAL EXPERT GIVES ADVICE FOR WINTER KEEPING

Here are some tips on how best to store vegetables for winter. They come from John Dodge, extension horticulturist, Washington State College.

Pit storage is one of the simplest, most economical ways to store vegetables, according to Dodge. There are two different kinds of pits, he says. One is simply a hole dug in the ground; the other is called an above-ground pit, and is really a mound of vegetables on top of the ground covered with straw and earth.

When the vegetables have been piled into a below- or an above-ground pit, it is well to cover them with a layer of straw—three or four inches of it. On the very top of the pile should be placed a box or crate of straw—upside down. The straw in the box will serve as a ventilator after the pile is covered with dirt. It will be needed for awhile to permit heat to escape from the vegetables.

Next put about two inches of dirt over the straw on the pit. Your pit is now fixed until cold weather arrives. (But don't put any dirt in the box that serves as a ventilator).

Just before cold weather comes in November or December, he continues, "the box of straw can be taken off. Now put on another layer of straw (about 6 inches) and another layer of dirt (also 6 inches) and your pit is ready for the colder winter weather."

There are a lot of vegetables that really keep well in pit storage, says Dodge. Among them are carrots, turnips, rutabagas, potatoes, beets, parsnips, salsify and cabbage.

But he advises against keeping them all in the same pit. Vegetables like cabbage and rutabagas that have a strong odor, he says, impart their flavor to other more mild flavored vegetables like carrots, beets and potatoes.

Several small pits are better than one large pit, he says. When a small quantity of several different kinds of vegetables are in one pit, you can take all of them out at one time and have enough to last for two or three weeks. But after cold weather sets in, it is not always easy to take part of the vegetables out of a large pit and cover it over again without freezing some of those you leave.

Pick Good Site
One of the important things to remember is to select a good site for either type of pit, he points out. It should be fairly close to the house and on a well-drained spot.

Another important thing to remember is that the vegetables should be in good condition when they are stored. This means they should be free of bruises and punctures. The dirt should be brushed from them gently. They should be cool; else it will take them too long to cool off in the pit. Don't try to store beets, turnips, carrots or rutabagas that are too large and tough. Medium size roots are usually more crisp and tender.

Additional information on storing fruits and vegetables may be found in Extension Bulletin 209, at the county agent's office.
