Popular Postman Wins Long Battle With Disability

Jack Quill, long-time head man at the Parkland Postoffice and well known throughout the community, recently won a decisive round in a six-month bout with a spinal and abdominal disability, and is back on his feet making up for lost time.

Vol. 16, No. 29

Confined to Beacon Hill Veterans Administration Hospital since last September, Jack remarked up his release, "Your recovery must be complete before you are released from the hospital." In other words, he's not going back.

A veteran of both World Wars. Jack has been a resident of Parkland since 1945 and in charge of the Parkland postoffice since 1949. He is also a member of the Parkland Light and Water Co. Board of Trustees, was the first President of the Parkland Kiwanis Club, is Past Commander of the American Legion, Past Chef-de-Gare of the Forty and Eight, a member of the Disabled War Veterans, the Tacoma Athletic Commission and a life member of the Tacoma Elks.

Published at Parkland Wn. LE 7-0223 Bethel Booster Club Presents Public Address Equipment

PRESIDENT GLENN ASH (center), of the Bethel Booster Club presents part of a new public address system to Dave Zacek (right), Bethel Senior High School Student Body President, as Herbert Dempsey, Bethel speech director, beams his approval. The purchase of the P.A. system was made possible by the approval of the Booster Club in a meeting held last fall.

Mr. Ash personally delivered the new equipment to the Bethel Senior High recently and turned it over to the school's drama and speech departments. The equipment includes an amplifier, a turntable, two microphones, microphone stands and a microphone boom stand. The audio equipment was requested by the Senior High School last fall to improve the P.A. system that was used at the high school since 1952 and has long been inadequate for large assemblies,

The purchase of the audio equipment added one more item that the Boosters have purchased for the Junior and Senior tion a few years ago. The goal of the Boosters is to provide equipment and supplies for the two schools that public school millages may not be used to

with JACK BROWN

The condition of America's youth continues to be a subject of warm debate. There is a hue and cry of delinquents, young mobsters, etc. etc.

Many will argue that the phenomenon of delinquency is considerably exaggerated, and the extent it does exist is at least as much the fault of the parents as of the children of our modern society, I'll go along with this thinking, and oppose the thinking of those who say we are badly underestimating the younger generation. Its rebellion, where it exists, is in fact a protest against not being taken seriously enough. I say it is caused in the main by lack of parential push and training. The guiding factor of our highly skilled trades is overlooked and underemphasized in the home, and in the schools, too, for that

Rather astonishing it is to realize that of our current sizable total of unemployment, three in every ten are less than 25

One might be tempted at first glance to take this in stride simply as evidence of the rising number of young job seekers. But the disturbing facts are that far too many in this age group are both uneducated and unskilled at a time when the economy's demand is for just the reverse—for highly trained individuals.

All signs suggest that as the increasing numbers of young people hit the labor market, their proportion among the total jobless will also rise. The only thing that can prevent this is a vast improvement in training and education of our maturing

Whose fault is it that they crop up on the labor market so

Many American families do not set standards of hard work. They do not put the eyes of their children on the pursuit of excellence. This pursuit need not be only in professional, business and other white collar tasks, for there is dignity, satisfaction and financial reward in the development of manual and mechanical skills in this highly technical age.

However, it's hard for any youngster to take the initiative on his own, with his parents sitting on their duffs accepting a dole as the way of life.

It's very true that trends in our present day life lean towards doing things the easy way and that the acquisition of skills is not easy. Without parental urging and example, countless youngsters just won't make the effort. Even with it, some

But the family is always the unit of resistance against any sort of weakening trends. It is the bulwark that must hold out. It is the keeper of tradition, the preserver of strength in

Let American families once more set the achievement of excellence as their guide. Let them drive, not merely urge, their youngsters to toil in its pursuit in all walks. Then we shall see whether we are underestimating American youngsters and if they are better than some of their elders say.

Sure-you can bounce right back at me and say that's easier said than done and I'll be the first to admit it. If you think I know not of what I speak you ought to be around my young monsters for a while. I like to practice what I preach and do so. yet with my boys refering only to dances, beatnik days, sports and already some talk of girls, I sometimes wonder if I'm not losing ground, with a little added push in that rearward direction from the schools.

On the other hand, when I come upon one of my boys writing a letter to the Encyclopedia Brittanica to advise them that they are wrong, or at least that he does not agree with some of their advocations, then I regain my faith in the final results of my efforts, and those of my neighbors whom I know are making a valiant effort at rearing their youngsters to be leaders of
