'Othello' Featured In Artist Series Finale

The National Shakespeare Company will recreate one of the world's great tragedies, "Othello," in the final Pacific Lutheran University Artist Series presentation of the year Monday, March 3.

The company, now in the midst of an eight-month tour, will appear in Eastvold Auditorium at 8:15 p.m.

Featured in the roles of Othello and Iago, Othello's ensign, are Clark Morgan and Don Plumley.

Morgan joined the company after portraying the Distinguished Negro in the current Broadway hit, "The Great White Hope." Some of his other Broadway credits include roles in "Flora the Red Menace", "Mandingo", and "Kwamina". He is a Boston Conservatory drama graduate.

A stage veteran who has appeared with the Hartford Stage Company and the Theater Company of Boston, Plumley most recently appeared in a dual role with the national company of Marat/Sade.

The play will be directed by Gene Frankel.

Now in their sixth touring season, the New York-based company has achieved the reputation as the ablest professional Shakespeare Company touring the country. This year's itinerary again encompasses over one hundred cities and towns in both the United States and Canada during the eight months of touring.

Boys' Choir Joins In Chorale Concert

The Borromeo Boychoir of Tacoma will make its public debut in an appearance with the Pacific Lutheran University Chorale and Chamber Orchestra Sunday, March 2.

Organized only five months ago, the 37-voice Boychoir features St. Charles Borromeo students between 10 and 14 years of age, selected from among 150 who auditioned in October.

Richard Proulx, founder of the Boychoir, was formerly director of music at Holy Childhood Church in St. Paul, Minn., for 10 years. His Boychoir there was known throughout the Midwest for its tours, recordings, telecasts and appearances with the Minneapolis Symphony and the Tyrone Guthrie Theater.

PLU GRAPPLERS FINISH FIFTH IN CONFERENCE MEET

Pacific Lutheran's wrestling team finished fifth in the Northwest Conference Wrestling Meet at Forest Grove this past weekend.

PLU scored 27 points behind Pacific (94), Linfield (78), Lewis and Clark (45), Willamette (30), and ahead of Whitman (25) and College of Idaho (18).

Pete Overvold was the top PLU wrestler, losing in the finals of the 167-pound division by one point to take second place. Third place PLU finisher was Paul Farnham, 145 lbs., while fourth places went to Ralph Neils, 115; Paul Mattison, 137; Joe Aiken, 160; Steve Haugland, 177; and Joe Gehring, 191.

A big surprise was the failure of Otto Peterson, 130-pound standout, to get past the qualifying matches.

Dixon Challenges Faculty Wives' Club

Aid requested by the black community could be described as discrimination in reverse, Tom Dixon, director of the Tacoma Urban League, told Pacific Lutheran University faculty wives Monday.

"Black people have been the target of discrimination for 350 years," he amplified his point. "We're not asking for equal time."

Four or five years of "reverse" discrimination would enable the black community to achieve the equality it seeks, he asserted.

"If we're ever to catch up," he added, "there will have to be special consideration." Otherwise, he concluded, even if discrimination were to cease today, the races would maintain their present unequal levels.

He outlined the goals of the "Now, Mr. Lincoln?" dinner campaign. "The average black man at present cannot normally get a business loan through regular channels," he said. "He doesn't have the collateral or the references. These funds will provide seed money to provide him with the down payment."

He added, "From all indications, the program will succeed." He indicated that he expected the campaign to raise at least $50,000.

"This campaign has also, to some degree, established a line of communication between whites and blacks in Tacoma," Dixon said.

Dixon cited a long list of still existing inequalities, nationwide as well as in Tacoma. One of the continuing problems, he added, was inaction on the part of most white people. "You don't act negatively," he charged, "but do you act positively?"

Tom Dixon, director of the Tacoma Urban League, chats with Mrs. Robert Mortvedt, wife of the university president and Mrs. Daniel Leasure, president of the PLU Faculty Wives Club, following the club's monthly meeting Monday. Subject of the chat was the "Now, Mr. Lincoln?" fund-raising campaign.

* * * * *

Black demands are justified, he asserted, because of the white man's implication in the ghettos, which are still, to a great extent, controlled and maintained by whites.

There are only about 50 black businesses in Tacoma with black population of 12,000, he explained. And most of the 12,000 live in the ghetto areas of the city.

Why are they there?

"Economic and social pressures," Dixon said. "White racism, if you will."

Dr. Reigstad To Direct European Study Tour

Events and places that influenced the poetry of Wordsworth and Coleridge will be examined during a summer study tour to Europe directed by Dr. Paul Reigstad, chairman of the Pacific Lutheran University English department.

The tour for course credit, one of two directed by PLU faculty this summer, will include visits to England, France, Norway, Denmark and Holland, Dr. Reigstad indicated. Lectures and discussions will be presented culminating in a seminar at Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge University.

Students leave Tacoma June 3 and return July 18. Applications subject to university approval must be received by March 1, along with the initial air reservation cost of $265. Total cost of the tour is $1,500.

To benefit from the group charter fare, participants must be members of a North Pacific District congregation of the American Lutheran Church. Membership does not affect eligibility, only transportation costs, Dr. Reigstad said.

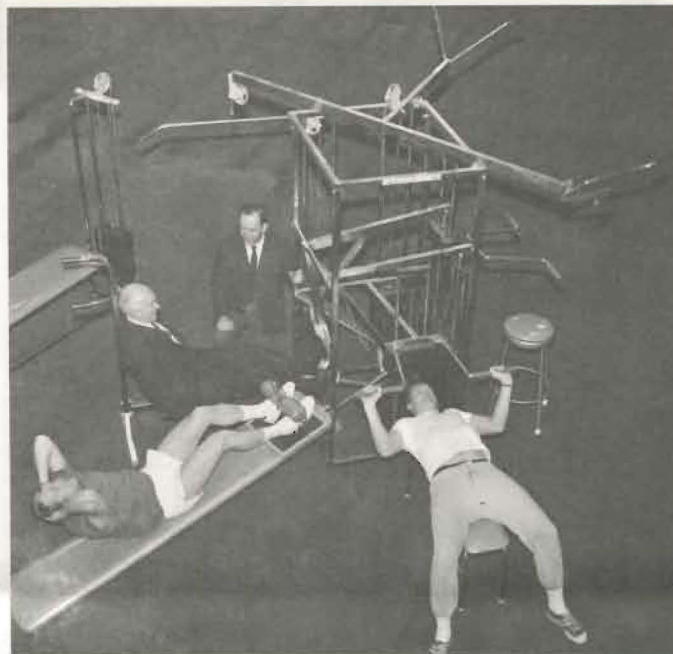

The purpose of the tour, according to Dr. Reigstad, is to provide an enhanced appreciation of the poetry of Wordsworth and Coleridge by understanding better the power of places and events to shape the imagination.

Application forms and complete itinerary are available from the PLU Registrar's Office, attention "Study Tours." For more detailed information, contact Dr. Reigstad at the university.

Knights Clinch 2nd Place In Conference

Pacific Lutheran University Knight cagers looked like champions this weekend, winning their last three Northwest Conference games by point spreads of 29, 28 and 36 points.

The victories gave the Lutes a 12-6 conference record, enough to clinch second place behind Linfield. It also brought the overall season record to 13-11, enough to assure a 22nd straight winning cage season.

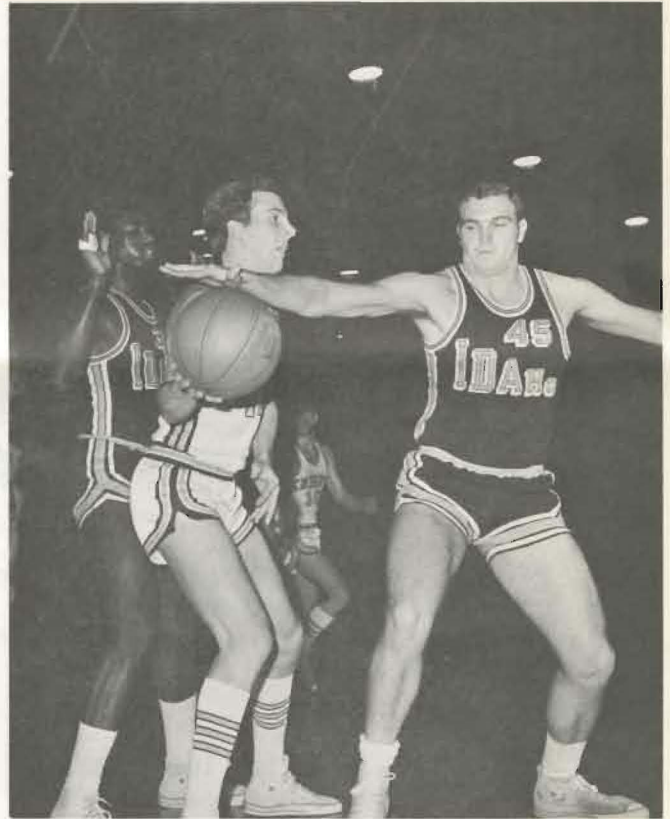

Wednesday the Knights were to close out their regular season against cross-town rival University of Puget Sound, a squad which has lost only three times this season and defeated the Lutes 99-60 early in January. If the underdog Lutes pull an upset it would be PLU's 25th win in 33 games against the Loggers in the long city series.

This weekend's three victories was by far the strongest sustained showing the Knights have made in an up-down season. College of Idaho was the victim Friday and Saturday by scores of 100-71 and 86-58. The Lutes, seeking revenge for the 57-56 loss to Whitman two weeks ago, felled the Missionaries 95-59 Saturday night.

Forward Leroy Sinnes had his three most productive nights of the season, hitting 12 of 15 from the floor enroute to a 29-point effort Thursday. He came back with 20 the following night, then climaxed the weekend with a 19-point second half performance Saturday to finish with 26 counters.

Freshman center Ake Palm also enjoyed a productive series, hitting 16 and 21 points in the two College of Idaho games and following with 18 points against Whitman. The 6-8 rookie held the Missionaries' high-scoring Bruce Bennett to 13 points Saturday evening.

Palm and forward Al Kollar combined for 62 rebounds in the series, with Kollar grabbing 18 Saturday night.

Ralph Whitman pulls down a rebound during Thursday night's 100-71 victory over College of Idaho.

* * * * *

As a result of the weekend heroics, PLU's four top scorers moved into contention with the top shooters in the conference, all shooting over 47 percent from the floor. Palm hit at a .494 rate, followed by Kollar at .493, Ralph Whitman at .477 and Sinnes with .472.

Scoring averages show Sinnes leading with 14.6, Kollar with 13.4 and Palm with 12.6. Kollar leads the statistical race over the entire season.

The Knights also moved ahead of their opponents in scoring and rebounding as a team for the first time this season, both in and out of the conference.
