Pacific Lutheran

Serving Others

"Educating for Lives of Service" is at the heart of a Pacific Lutheran University education and Lutes are noted for service above self. In this issue of Pacific Lutheran Scene, we take a look at everything from students and alumni to admissions and curriculum — all aspects that help define "Lute."

7 The World as Classroom

More and more classes at PLU are offering a service learning component that requires students to spend time volunteering in the community as an integral part of the overall coursework.

Students Spend Spring Break Repairing Elderly Woman's Home

PLU's chapter of Habitat for Humanity sent seven PLU students to repair the earthquake-damaged home of 80-year-old Ruth Cleveland. Excerpts from Tara Hudiburg's '98 journal recount the students' experience.

8 Alumna Called to Serve in Lutheran Volunteer Corps

Adrienne Chamberlain '94 has adopted Lutheran Volunteer Corps' motto as her own: A year of service, a lifetime of commitment.

9 Living a Life of Service

Alumni John Nilson '73 and Linda Nilson '74 manage to hold down high profile jobs, raise two active daughters and still devote a large chunk of time to community service.

10 Prestigious Regents' and President's Scholarships Based on Scholarship, Service

Many schools offer full-ride scholarships to smart students. At PLU, the smart students must also demonstrate service to others.

Note to Readers

This month, PLU students and other volunteers will conduct a random sample telephone survey of 300 Pacific Lutheran Scene readers. We want to make sure we produce a publication you want to read. We promise the call will take no more than 10 minutes. So, if you get a phone call regarding Scene, please share your opinion with us. Results of the survey will be published in the Fall 1996 issue. Thank you for suggestions on improving your publication.

PLU president serves on national commission

PLU President Loren Anderson has been invited to serve a three-year term on the National Association of Independent Colleges and Universities Commission on Financing Higher Education. The commission includes 20 people whose primary goal is to influence the shape of legislation in 1997 when all federal financial aid programs will be up for reauthorization. The first meeting was held in Washington D.C. in late March, and President Anderson also met privately with Washington U.S. Sens. Patty Murray and Slade Gorton.

Pacific Lutheran Scene earns award

The winter issue of Pacific Lutheran Scene received a bronze award from the Council for the Advancement and Support of Education. CASE also recognized PLU with a gold award for its "Symphony of Thanks" annual report. Also, the Admissions Marketing Report (a national newspaper of admissions marketing) awarded a bronze award to PLU's "Make A Lasting Difference" campaign brochure and an award of merit for "Symphony of Thanks."

Congratulations to the creative team of Jan Brazzell, Paul Porter, Janet Prichard, Linda Elliott, Dean Driskell and Chris Tumbusch.

Pop cans and scrap paper help Campus Safety

Q: TRUE OR FALSE: Mountain bikes are made of ink-smeared Post-It notes, crushed pop cans and used motor oil.

A: TRUE. The year-old recycling program at PLU donated $7,400 of its total profits — $15,750 — to Campus Safety for the purchase of six Kona Lava Dome mountain bikes and accompanying accessories such as helmets and goggles.

'The bikes have improved our effectiveness quite dramatically," said Walt Huston, director of Campus Safety.

Adam White '94, environmental services coordinator for PLU, is the brainchild behind the bikes project. A Spokane native, he was familiar with the effectiveness of bicycle-mounted police in the city and thought it would be a great idea at PLU.

White is active in statewide recycling efforts. He is the vice president of the Washington Organic Recycling Council.

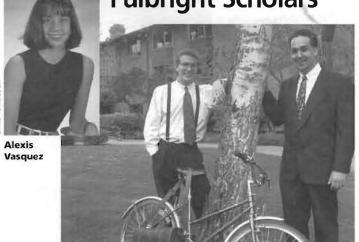

The remaining earnings from PLU's recycling program were used to upgrade and add recycling containers around campus, and fund a week's worth of Earth Day activities in April. Future projects include starting a comprehensive composting system for the university, said White.

Dean emeritus named chair of international commission

Gundar King (dean emeritus, School of Business) has been named chair of the newlyformed commission, The American Commission for Higher Education Reforms in Latvia. Composed of university professors from the United States and Canada, the commission will assist the leaders of Latvian institutions of higher education to develop strategic plans to effect academic reforms and will work with a counterpart group in Latvia.

PLU announces three Fulbright Scholars

Three more PLU seniors earned Fulbright Scholarships for the 1996–1997 year. Best friends and former freshmen roommates Jason Thompson and Erik Melver will travel to Korea and teach English for one year.

Alexis Vasquez will spend a year in Concepcion, Chile, researching sustainable development and how it relates to free market policies on forestry that were put into place during the Pinochet regime (1973–89).

This brings PLU's total number of Fulbright Scholars to 40 since 1975.

New director of information resources named

Mary Ann Dase has accepted the position of executive director of information resources, a new position at PLU that will provide leadership for Mortvedt Library, Computer Center and Telecommunication Services. Previously the director of university network and communication services at California State University, she began her position at PLU in May.

Dase received her bachelor's from UC-Davis, her master's from CSU-Long Beach and earned her doctorate from Claremont Graduate School.

PLU is among a few universities leading a new trend to more closely align library and technology functions.

Killen earns summer stipend

Patricia O'Connell Killen (religion) was awarded a Louisville Institute Summer Stipend for 1996. She will conduct research pertaining to her proposal, "Can the Tradition Carry Us? Lay Catholic Spirituality in the Pacific Northwest, 1880-1965." The award supports 10 weeks of research and

Three faculty retire, receive honors at commencement

Chemistry Professor William Giddings, math Professor Margaret Herzog and physical education Dean David Olson retired this spring and were honored at commencement.

Giddings began teaching at PLU 34 years ago. He was the first chair of the division of natural sciences and led funding activities for a new science building. His efforts helped shape the form and function of the Rieke science Center, dedicated 11 years ago. He provided leadership on both natural sciences and university-wide core curriculum development and implementation. He was also instrumental in developing interdisciplinary programs in environmental studies, integrated studies, and Chinese studies.

Since 1968, Herzog taught mathematics and computer classes designed particularly for liberal arts students. Each summer she was active in the Middle College program, enabling students to refine their skills in basic math and to ease their transition from high school to college. "She is best remembered for her considerable expertise in helping students overcome math anxiety and thus succeed in the curriculum of their choice," said Provost Paul Menzel.

In Olson's 28-year tenure as dean and athletic director, he built PLU's intercollegiate program from 12 to 19 sports; teams have won nine National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics national championships and garnered 25 all-sports awards. He was inducted into the NAIA Hall of Fame in 1989. In 1984, he was one of only five U.S. educators invited to the International Olympic Academy in Greece. "Throughout his tenure, graduates from the school of physical education have achieved noteworthy distinction as teachers and coaches," said Menzel.

Berniker and Gibson named Boeing Faculty Fellows

niker Linda Gibson

Eli Berniker and Linda Gibson (business) were selected to participate in the Boeing Company's Faculty Fellowship project, "Implementation of New Business Management Systems and Processes in a Manufacturing Business Unit." As faculty fellows this summer, Berniker will help provide a new cost management system for the final stages of the 737's assembly and Gibson will be working in the compensation area at the Defense and Space Division of the Boeing plant in Kent. Bruce Finnie (business) was last year's recipient.

Programs reaccredited

The Marriage and Family Therapy Program was reaccredited by the Commission on Accreditation for Marriage and Family Therapy Education and awarded five years of accreditation with no stipulations regarding required changes. PLU's MFT program is the only accredited program in a five-state area.

The PLU School of Education has been reaccredited using new performance-oriented standards of the National Council for Accreditation of Teacher Education. The 1995 accreditation standards emphasize teacher performance, focusing on what teacher candidates should know and be able to do, and expect candidates to demonstrate specific skills.

Jazz Ensemble earns award at international festival

The University Jazz Ensemble took second place in the four-year college division at the Reno International Jazz Festival on April 20. Under the direction of Paul Harshman, the ensemble performed a 30-minute set for three judges.

Also, two music students were named Outstanding Soloists: Marcus Vann (bass) and Marcus Røsnæs (guitar).

PLU music student captures guild award

PLU junior Heidi Vanderford won the Olympia Opera Guild competition, including a $1,000 prize. This honor follows another first-place award she garnered along with fellow music student Erica Wood from the Tacoma Opera Guild competition held last October.

Student Worker of the Year competes at national level

André Toulouse, who earned the PLU Student Employee of the Year award (Campus Safety), also won the state and regional student employee of the year awards. He is currently being considered for the award at the national level. The winner will be announced in November.

Last year, PLU's Student Worker of the Year, Stephanie Rose (Development), won the regional competition. This is only the second year PLU has entered the local competition.

KPLU garners awards, surpasses fund raising goal

■ National Public Radio station KPLU 88.5 earned 28 awards for radio news reporting from the Washington Press Association at its annual "Communicator of Excellence" awards dinner. Of the 28 awards given to KPLU news staff, eight were first-place honors, 10 were second place, five were third place, and five were honorable mentions. KPLU won more awards than any other radio station. Other local radio stations winning awards included KUOW (10) and KIRO (4).

- KPLU General Manager Martin Neeb was recently named "Marketing and Media Hall of Fame Radio Person of the Year" by the Puget Sound Chapter's American Marketing Association and Media Inc. Neeb is the first person in public radio to receive the award.
- KPLU raised nearly $400,000 during its largest and most successful spring fund drive.

Reformation Preaching in an Ecumenical Age

Summer Institute of Theology July 14–18, 1996 • Pacific Lutheran University

Pastors and laity are invited to commemorate the 450th anniversary of Martin Luther's death this summer by recalling our Lutheran heritage. Recognizing we live in an increasingly diverse culture that is sometimes hostile to the church and in light of greater cooperation among Christian denominations we will explore with several Luther scholars the crucial question: "What is the unique Lutheran message for our world today?"

Featuring the following faculty:

Michael Rogness, Professor of Homiletics, Luther Seminary, St. Paul, Minn.

Ted Peters, Professor of Systematic Theology, Pacific Lutheran Theological Seminary Berkeley, Calif.

Lyman Lundeen, Religion Professor, PLU Mary Jane Haemig, Religion Professor, PLU

Commencement speaker unveils national voter registration plan

College freshmen across the country may soon be able to register for not only English 101 but also the ability to cast a ballot. David Warren, president of the National Association of Independent Colleges and Universities, unveiled a national plan that would register college students for class and to vote simultaneously. He warned the class of '96 that many important decisions loom on society's horizon — from pro-life vs. pro-choice to environment vs. jobs. "Those decisions require your voice," said Warren. "The best way to be heard is to vote."

PUBLISHED CORNER

Megan Benton's (English) recently published book "Sizzle and Smoke: Iconography of Books and Reading in Modern American Advertising" is a study analyzing the role of the book in American advertising.

Howard Butcher (nursing) submitted four papers to be published in the book "Nursing Diagnosis & Intervention: Planning for Patient Care." Master of nursing student Gloria Morrison co-wrote one of the papers. The book will be available in the fall. Butcher's paper "A Unitary Field Pattern Portrait of Dispiritedness in Later Life," will be published this summer in Visions: The Journal of Rogerian

William Giddings (chemistry) presented a paper on PLU's exchange program with Sichuan Union University in China at the American Chemical Society in New Orleans in March. Established 10 years ago through the efforts of professors K.T. Tang (physics) and Charles Anderson (chemistry), the program has served 88 students, including 16 from other institutions. The program also has brought 25 visiting scholars to PLU to date.

Stewart Govig's (religion) book "Souls are Made of Endurance" was recently featured by the National Alliance for the Mentally Ill in Washington, D.C. as one of two books recommended to assist families confronted by mental illness. His article, "Religious Education and Mental Disability: A Higher Education Model," was published in the November 1995 issue of Journal of Religion in Disability & Rehabilitation.

David Hansen's (biology) review of "Ecophysiology of Coniferous Forests" was published in the November 1995 issue of Northwest Science.

Patricia O'Connell Killen (religion) recently published the essay "Geography, Denominations, and the Human Spirit: A Decade of Studies on Religion of the Western United States" in the October 1995 issue of Religious Studies

Erin McKenna's (philosophy) article "Feminism and Vegetarianism: A Critique of Peter Singer" appeared in the Fall 1994 issue of Philosophy of Contemporary World.

Earl Smith (sociology) published the paper "The Self-Fulfilling Prophecy: Genetically Superior African American Athletes" in a special edition of the Humboldt Journal of Social Relations - African Americans in the 1990s that Smith organized and edited.

Glenn Van Wyhe (School of Business) received a favorable review of his book "The Struggle for Status: A History of Accounting Education" in the October 1995 issue of the prestigious journal The Accounting Review.

Tamara Williams' (languages) article "Narrative Strategies and Counter-History in El Estrecho Dudoso" appeared in the Spring 1994 issue of Inti: Revista de Literatura Hispanica.

SUMMER HOURS: MONDAY-THURSDAY 9:00AM-5:00PM • FRIDAY 9:00AM-NOON

PLU seeks to empower students for lives of thoughtful inquiry, service, leadership and care — for other persons, for the community and for the earth.

About five years ago, students sponsored a "What is a Lute?" contest to "invent" a new mascot. (The name "Lute" was penned by local sports writers who couldn't fit "Lutheran" into their headlines.) Today, any student — past, present or honorary — is a Lute, a person distinguished by service above self. In this issue of Pacific Lutheran Scene, we take a look at everything from students and alumni to admissions and curriculum — all aspects that help define "Lute."

Service

Service learning blends academic rigor with volunteerism

BY ONEY CRANDALL

LU has some new classrooms. They have no blackboards or desks, and they may be open all night. Some are within walking distance of campus, others are across the world. They are in churches, rundown buildings, along protected stream beds or in city parks — or even in tiny remote villages.

They are the places where PLU students, as part of an academic course, offer service in answer to community needs. What they learn, as they work together to problem solve with people from all walks of life, is that life has many teachers and many Annette Goldstein, a senior from Eugene, Ore., majoring in Spanish and elementary education, spends time each week with Latino visitors to Nativity House, a center for the homeless in Tacoma. She chose to work there as an assignment for her Spanish literature course titled Latino Experiences in the U.S.

"When I first started the class, I was skeptical," she says, "but my work at Nativity House has truly given me an understanding of what we are reading. It has given me 10 times more insight into homelessness. One man just needed someone to tell his story to. I can't change his life. I just listened. It was incredible."

Lisa Meierotto, a junior in the same Spanish class, teaches English to adults at Centro Latino, a comprehensive service agency for the Hispanic community in Tacoma. Meierotto, a Boise, Idaho, native whose mother is from Mexico, deepens her understanding of the breadth of Latino culture in the U.S. by sharing stories with those she tutors.

"I ask them about their Mexican family traditions and they tell me about their customs, what they do for a living and how hard it is to learn English. I've not had the problems with prejudice and discrimination which they have to face," she said.

Service learning, as this integration of community service into academic course work is called, is not entirely new to PLU. In PLU's schools of education, nursing and physical education, as well as in the departments of social work, and marriage and family therapy, professional practica have long included assisting those in need.

What is new is the growing inclusion of service as an integral part of liberal arts course work. Within the past two years, more than 400 students in at least 25 classes in 15 academic departments have found themselves serving as literacy tutors, mentors, environmental cleanup assistants, hospice helpers, senior recreation leaders, food bank stockers, family advocates, crisis line monitors and much more.

Annette Goldstein, a senior majoring in Spanish and elementary education, spends time each week with Latino visitors to Nativity House, a center for the homeless in Tacoma. She chose to work there as an assignment for her Spanish literature course titled Latino Experiences in the U.S.

Center for Public Service

PLU established the Center for Public Service in 1993 to connect the service and service learning interests of the university with the changing needs of our world. The primary goal of the Center for Public Service is to provide a rich variety of volunteer and service learning experiences for the whole campus.

The Center for Public Service also aims to meet human needs in the community. A major connection is the Family and Children's Center, located in the university's East Campus, where faculty and students from many departments participate in public service through such programs as Marriage & Family Therapy, the Wellness Clinic, Second Wind (an educational program for senior citizens), First Place for Children Daycare and the Adult Literacy Project.

The Volunteer Center is another part of the Center for Public Services, providing resources and referrals to connect PLU students with volunteer opportunities in a variety of

Assistant Professor of Spanish Tamara Williams says the service learning component of her class is essential.

"In a course that deals with inter-ethnic issues, it is virtually impossible to represent the entire spectrum of Latino experiences in the U.S.," says Williams. "On the one hand, by having a service learning component, both the concept and the reality of diversity within the Latino community were enriched and made more relevant for the students. On the other, I was able to draw my students into a discussion of the larger issues related to the limits of literary representation."

Her students agree their service assignments with the Latino culture here have made those texts come alive. "I would like to have all my classes be this way," says Meierotto. "It adds so much more when you learn something you're actually applying to real life instead of regurgitating for a test. There would be no point in having learned it in the first place if you were going to just keep it in your head."

Key to these service learning experiences is the time spent in class reflecting on how students understand their implications for academic theory and their own learning process. Patricia Killen, associate professor of religion, and Susan Carlton, assistant professor of English, have described these scholar-service experiences as "lived texts that accompany and complicate the written texts of the field."

The reflection process moves students back and forth between their written texts and their lived texts, teaching them to see that theories are not purely abstract and academic but have consequences for individuals and for society.

Students taking Carlton's "Encountering Christian Traditions" writing class, for example, found themselves working in a variety of church-sponsored social service settings. They were then asked to write reflectively about the insight these experiences gave them into the relationship between church tradition and social action. In the same semester, (see Service Learning page 10)

Seth Copeland '98, right, shares a laugh with Don, a homeless man, at Nativity House in Tacoma. More and more classes at PLU are being revised to include service learning components such as Copeland's volunteer work at Nativity House.

Vacation with a purpose

Students help rebuild earthquake-damaged home of 80-year-old woman

even PLU students headed for California during spring break in March but their plans were more lofty than swim suits, sunsets and volleyball on the beach. Working for Habitat for Humanity, the students lugged two-by-fours, swung hammers, and helped with other construction jobs to help repair the earthquakedamaged home of Ruth Clevelund, an 80-year-old resident of the San Fernando Valley.

Following are excerpts from Tara Hudiburg's journal:

Today we met the supervisors at 9 a.m. and they gave us a brief orientation. Another visitor, Frank, joined us for the week. He is from Nevada and travels around the country helping Habitat for Humanity (HFH). We left for the work site at 9:30 and began work around 10 a.m.

We are repairing a house that was devastated two years ago in the Northridge earthquake. The owner of the house is a woman who is 80 years old. It was 83 degrees today and we all enjoyed it very much. She made cookies for us and made sure we drank plenty of water.

Christy and I chalked the plywood for the air gun. Judy marked the beams where all the studs were. Jenny and Susan cut and measured the plywood while Mike and Alex put it up.

There were four other men working with us but not much guidance. You would not just wait around for someone to give you an order. You had to ask questions about how to do something and then just do it. If you did it wrong then you fixed it, but nobody got mad at you.

We hope to get a much earlier start tomorrow so we can get a lot of work done before the heat gets too bad (although we much prefer it to cold rain). Everyone agreed that we should get more done tomorrow because we are all more confident about what we are doing, so there won't be any hesitation to just dive in.

TUESDAY, MARCH 19

Surprisingly we made it on time. We got to the work site at 8:30 a.m. and we worked hard. I found it amazing that seven college students could manage to all be there and ready early in the morning on our vacation. We don't really have someone to make us do it or get mad at us if we don't, so we just have to encourage each other. Jenny and I seem to worry the most about being there on time so we're the ones that get to nag everyone.

We paired off today. Most of us used the skill saw, chop saw and jig saw. I was hesitant at first, but Frank, a Habitat volunteer from Nevada, was very patient. He told us we were going to screw up before we did, so there wasn't much pressure. He made us do things we weren't sure we could do. For instance, Christy kept insisting I do all the hammering because she couldn't. Frank made her stand on the ladder and pound the nail until it went in. She didn't ask me to do it anymore.

Alex, Mike, Jenny and Susan have struck up a competition.

They are trying to see who can get the best cuts around the windows. When they are happy with a board they write their names on it.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 20

We know we're going to finish the sheer walling today. We're going to stay until it's done.

Ruth's house was built in 1947 and when the earthquake hit in 1994, the house was devastated. All the stucco had to be removed and we are putting up the plywood all the way around the house. It really helps strengthen the whole house. Al, another Habitat volunteer, told us he had it done to his house five years ago. When the earthquake hit, he was the only one in his neighborhood that didn't need repairs.

Ruth spent about $30,000 trying to get the house fixed, but the contractor ran off with the money. We've all heard that story before. People like to take advantage of the ciderly. Habitat jumped in to help her out. She was given a loan through HFH and she'll pay it back with no interest.

All of Habitat's labor is volunteer, that's where we come in. We've got a great crew, too. We've finished far more than the contractor thought we would and we still have a day and a half left to work. The funny thing is we all wish we could stay and work for another week. It's been so much fun and, compared to the stress of school, it has been incredibly relaxing.

The part I like the most with this kind of volunteer work is you get to see the results right away. You get to meet the people you're helping and you get to build valuable relationships with other volunteers.

FRIDAY, MARCH 22

I hate saying good-bye to people. We had to say good-bye to Frank today. He was going north to Santa Barbara to join another HFH affiliate and work there for two weeks. We started calling him Coach and we wish we could work with him again. I hope we see him at a work site somewhere else someday. He was a really neat person. He and his wife are going to travel the U.S. for a year in August working at various HFH sites.

Anyway, we did the trim around the windows and Christy and I put primer on it. Ruth has asked us to come back someday. We're welcome to stay in her house if we're ever visiting LA and need a place to stay. I'm going to miss the people, but I'm not going to miss LA. The smog drove me crazy. Even the heat could get old. Well, back to school. I have two tests and a paper next week. It's been fun.

PLU's chapter of Habitat for Humanity will gladly accept your donation to help defray students' travel expenses. Make checks payable to PLU Habitat Chapter and mail to Office of Development, PLU, Tacoma, Wash., 98447.

his Aboriginal quote inspired Adrienne Chamberlain '94 to dedicate a year of her life to serving others.
From September 1994 until August 1995, the secondary education and Spanish graduate served as a supervisor for after-school inner-city and evening tutorial programs in Wilmington, Del. She was a member of the Lutheran Volunteer Corps (LVC), a 17-year-old non-profit volunteer service organization open to people willing to commit a year of full-time service in urban social justice organizations.

"Always hearing about declining student interest, drugs in schools, gang problems and the rise of violence, I was ready to give up on pursuing a career in teaching," she said. "I either wanted to throw in the towel or do something about it."

Frustrated with her career path, Chamberlain wanted to submerge herself in service. She was especially interested in nonprofit organizations, and was attracted to the Lutheran Volunteer Corps because the program offered a wide variety of ways and locations to serve.

LVC places volunteers in Baltimore, Chicago, Milwaukee, Minneapolis/St. Paul, Seattle, Washington D.C. and Wilmington. LVC is also expanding to Tacoma in the 96-97 program year.

Each volunteer works as a full-time staff member in an agency or organization addressing social issues. Placements range from direct service and health care to community organizing and public policy.

In Wilmington, where Chamberlain was stationed, volunteers lived together in intentional communities of four people. Volunteers are housed in low- to middle-income neighborhoods that are chosen with regard to safety, access to public transportation, and the proximity to work sites.

Chamberlain considers her devotion to serving others as a way of life. "I don't like the word service. It means much more than just helping people. I feel that service is best described as a cycle — everyone giving and receiving, empowering one another to live together in better communities," she said.

After her stint with LVC was over, Chamberlain spent three months in Washington D.C. recruiting others to join the organization. She spoke at area churches, schools and universities telling people about her satisfying experiences in Delaware. Also, she spent February traveling the Pacific Northwest recruiting volunteers. Adrienne shared her story at one of PLU's chapel services that month

Service truly has become a way of life for Chamberlain. She has adopted LVC's motto as her own — "A year of service, a lifetime of commitment." It was a struggle for her to say goodbye to her LVC family and friends in Delaware, but she is ready to give back to the organization. "I remember how calming it was to have support while I was away and now I can assist new LVC participants," she said.

Chamberlain plans to serve on a volunteer support committee that prepares dinners and retreats for new recruits in the Seattle and Tacoma LVC program.

Rejuvenated by her experiences with the Lutheran Volunteer Corps, Chamberlain is back on her professional career track and is currently substitute teaching in Euphrata, Wash.

For more information about the LVC, call PLU's Campus Ministry office at (206) 535-7464.

Placing service above self

"Therefore, my dear brothers, stand firm. Let nothing move you. Always give yourselves fully to the work of the Lord, because you know that your labor in the Lord is not in vain."

I CORINTHIANS 15:58

BY LINDA ELLIOTT

Between the two of them, Linda Nilson '74 and her husband John Nilson '73 manage to hold down two high profile, high stress jobs, raise two young daughters who are busy with school and extracurricular activities, stay active in their church and still devote a large chunk of time to important social causes.

Making service a part of everyday life is practically a necessity for the Nilsons, who grew up with a strong service ethic in their families.

"It's an important part of being in the community and the church. It also gives you a say in what's happening and allows you to give back, to be a good neighbor," said Linda, an Everett, Wash., native. "I've known that from the start."

John agrees. "The need to serve comes right out of the Christian faith and the Lutheran vocation. If you have the talents and the gifts from God, you need to use them."

The Nilsons live in the city of Regina, Canada, in the province of Saskatchewan. Linda is vice president of medical services for the Regina Health District, which covers 400 doctors, three acute care hospitals, one rehabilitation center, ambulance service, and services for home and long-term care, mental health, addiction recovery and more.

She also chairs the board of regents at Luther College, Regina, teaches Sunday school at Our Savior's Lutheran Church in Regina, sits on numerous work-related and community boards and committees, and splits driving duty with John for their daughters' assorted activities. Ingrid and Solveig, 7 and 10, are constantly on the go with lessons for ballet, jazz, Scandinavian dancing, piano, figure skating, musical theatre, and languages.

John, a Canadian citizen, is the minister of justice and attorney general for Saskatchewan. He was appointed to the cabinet in November 1995 and had to give up the posts of Consul of Norway and acting Consul of Denmark because of a potential conflict of interest. He volunteers with the Canadian Bar Association, is president of Family Service of Saskatchewan, and is an honorary life board member of the Family Service Bureau of Regina, another social service agency.

He has been instrumental in local successes in law reform, family law, health law, crime prevention and urban safety. He served on the National Church (see Service Above Self page 10) onjia Rainsberry, a communication major from Ellensburg Wash., won the 1995–96 Gladys Mortvedt Voluntary Service Award.

The award was established by Robert A.L. Mortvedt — president of PLU from 1962–1969 — in memory of his wife Gladys. It is presented annually to a student who has quietly won attention by rendering voluntary service on or off campus without expectation of recognition or compensation.

Sonjia was nominated for her service both to the PLU campus and to the community. On campus she has served in the Red Carpet Club, as wing rep to her hall council, as chair of Family Weekend, and as co-chair of the Sankta Lucia celebration.

In the community she teaches Sunday school at First Lutheran Church and most recently has spent many hours as a volunteer developing fundraising and promotional strategies for Faith Homes, a non-profit group home for young women moving from troubled family situations into self-sufficiency.

Rainsberry did this work through the PLU School of Business-United Way Partnership. When her volunteer assignment was completed she continued on her own to produce the Faith Homes annual report, a project of considerable scope and great value to the organization.

Sonjia, whose minors are in business and sociology, hopes to work after graduation as a community resource coordinator for a non-profit organization.

"I like helping people, and it's rewarding to do things for the community," she says. "I enjoy the non-competitiveness in service projects. It's more of a cooperative philosophy. People work together to get things done, and especially when funds are limited, that is valuable for everyone."

Scholarships hinge on service

BY BRENNA GUECK '96

n March, PLU awarded 40 President's scholarships ($6,500) and three Regent's scholarships (full tuition) to academically gifted entering freshmen who also showed a dedication to community service.

These 43 scholarships are the most prestigious of the more than 2000 scholarships PLU annually awards.

To be considered for the Regents' and President's scholarships, applicants were judged not only on their scholarly ranking and abilities, but also on their leadership qualities, activities, accomplishments, and service to their community, church and school.

Service was an important criteria in the selection process because it reflected which students possessed dedication and involvement beyond the realm of academia. Many applicants were highly involved in their school's student government, in a variety of volunteer groups, or in church youth groups.

These entering freshman will have several chances to continue their dedication to service at PLU. Opportunities range from being a Big Brother/Big Sister and assisting with AIDS awareness to helping readers in a literacy program and volunteering at a local soup kitchen.

President Loren Anderson agrees the scholarship recipients are well suited for life at PLU. "Not only are these students academically superior, but their value systems are aligned with those of this university," he said.

Service has always been an important element at PLU. For years, the university's motto has been "Educating for Lives of Service."

The emphasis on service is ever more apparent today, judging from a statement taken from PLU's new long-range planning document — PLU 2000: "PLU seeks to empower students for lives of thoughtful inquiry, service, leadership and care - for other people, for their communities and for the earth."

the students took Killen's "Christian Traditions" religion class and reviewed their service experiences as personal "texts" that enhanced their written texts on Christian tradition.

Faculty find this method of teaching both demanding and rewarding. Balancing the time needed to cover course material with the time needed to reflect on service experiences is sometimes difficult. The end result, however, is almost always positive.

"Our expectation was confirmed," says Carlton. "The quality of the students' reflection was increased because they moved back and forth between the course texts and the lived text of their service experience."

All three of the classes mentioned here, as well as four others in 1995–96, represented newly revised courses with the goal of addressing problems identified by the surrounding communities while deepening the insight and long-term service of PLU students. The classes were designed in response to a grant awarded by Aid Association for Lutherans to PLU's Center for Public Service. Oney Crandall is the director of PLU's Center for Public Service.

Council and is a member of the Lutheran Peace Fellowship and Lutherans Concerned.

That's only half their resumes.

Before they met at PLU (Linda was a junior, John a senior), both were involved in a number of volunteer projects. Linda organized a Big Sister program for St. Anne's group home, even living there one summer as a volunteer. She also gave a year to Western State Mental Hospital helping with social activities for patients. John worked at a church in the Hilltop area and worked with several student volunteer organizations.

John sums up the family's desire to help in one Bible verse he has carried with him for most of his life — I Corinthians 15:58. He added, "Your work will never be in vain. That's the theme of our lives"

Campaign to Endow the Future of Pacific Lutheran University

Campaign receives $2 million 'giddyup' dward Ramsdale was 17 when he came to America from his native Norway. He had $10 in his pocket and one English word in his vocabulary, "giddyup."

It was "giddyup" ever since. After saving money for years, he was finally able to buy some land in 1935. He continued to invest in land, stocks and bonds after he retired in the 70s.

Ramsdale was an avid supporter of education and made a number of significant contributions to PLU over the years as well as remembering PLU in his will.

When he died in 1993 at the age of 97, PLU learned the extent of his generosity. "Now that all the paperwork is sorted out, we are able to announce that Mr. Ramsdale's estate has given PLU just over $2 million," said Ed Larson, executive director of charitable and estate planning.

One million will fund the Edward Ramsdale Endowed Scholarship and the other million will be used for capital projects hon-

Anderson announced that more than $50 million has already been committed to PLU's $52 million Make a Lasting Difference campaign. "Now we will be asking alumni and friends across the country to help the university move beyond our $52 million goal," he said.

"The campaign's goal is to strengthen our ability to bring promising students together with a talented teaching faculty to accomplish PLU's mission of 'Educating for Lives of Service," he added.

The spring banquet also honored the 52 charter members of Q Club. "These dedicated friends of the university have been with us since Q Club began 25 years ago," said PLU Director of Development David Berntsen '58. He and his wife Carolee '59 were two of the charter members receiving recognition.

Last year more than 2,000 Q Club members donated more than $1.1 million for 950 student scholarships ranging from $500 to $8,000. To join Q Club, call 206-535-7429 or 1-800-826-0035.

'We have always been impressed by the athletic philosophy and the program at PLU," said Scott Names. "The combination of scholarship and athletics is unique, and we are proud to promote lifetime fitness for the entire campus."

Dave Olson, PLU's athletic director and dean of physical education, said the Names' support over the years has been crucial to the growth of PLU's fitness programs.

PLU President Loren Anderson continued, "Pacific Lutheran is deeply appreciative to the Names family for this gift, which will have a positive effect on our physical education and athletic program for years to come."

The campaign's goal is to strengthen our ability to bring promising students together with a talented teaching faculty to accomplish PLU's mission of 'Educating for Lives of Service.'

Teacher chosen as tops in the nation

aura Attaway '86 begins each morning seated in a circle with her students. They pass a Native American-style drum around the circle as children and teachers alike beat on it and share their feelings and the goings on in their lives.

One child says, "I'm happy because next week is vacation." When Attaway is passed the drum she responds. "I'm happy about vacation, too. But I'll also miss you all." The children nod in agreement.

Attaway teaches at Chief Leschi Elementary School in Tacoma, a school run by the Puyallup Indian Tribe. The Bureau of Indian Affairs recently chose her as its Teacher of the Year for the nation's American Indian Schools, "It's all been a bit overwhelming," was Attaway's reaction to all the attention she received following the

Though not a Native American herself, Attaway's ability to recognize and meet the diverse needs of her students is one of the many reasons she was recommended for the award

She technically teaches first grade, yet her class of 26 includes several kindergartners and a few special education students. When the school's other classes became overcrowded, Attaway volunteered to place the special education students in her classroom. She also frequently opens her classroom to current PLU education students, giving them a glimpse of real classroom life.

Attaway received both her bachelor's and master's in education from PLU. She spent two years teaching in Tacoma before moving to Chief Leschi, where she has taught for the past eight years.

"I knew as soon as I came here, this was where I wanted to be," she said. "The kids here are great. Everyone immediately made me feel welcome. My favorite part of teaching here is the cultural aspect. I feel like I'm learning as much as I'm teaching."

Divine intervention prodded Davies to work with developmentally disabled

After observing a special education class as part of her coursework at PLU, Ruth (Nyborg) Davies '89 decided there was no way she had the patience to work with the developmentally disabled. God had other plans.

Davies went ahead and earned her degree in physical education (she was known as "Ruth the trainer" around PLU) and then started work as an athletic trainer at Franklin Pierce High School in Tacoma. While there, she was asked to work with special education students. She wasn't overly thrilled at first, but suddenly she was hooked.

"I've pretty much devoted my life now to people with disabilities," she said. "It's amazing to look back and see what God has done to get me to this point."

In the summer of 1992, she quit her job to marry Scott Davies and move to Spokane. It was the perfect transition into full-time work with the developmentally disabled. Initially, she worked for Catholic Community Services in a residential program, then later joined an independent residential services agency. A year ago, Davies, her husband and their son Michael Scott (born Aug. 19, 1994) returned to the Puget Sound area. Davies now works for The Arc, a non-profit agency in Tacoma supporting the developmentally disabled so they can live independently. The Arc has 90 clients and helps with financial management, personal care, grocery shopping, etc.

The Arc's main revenue source is proceeds from the Value Village, and from direct clothing donations. If you'd like to learn more about the Arc, call 206-383-2643.

PLU volunteer training weekend launched

BY KAREN LARSEN '96

very year hundreds of people volunteer their services to PLU. In the past each has gone through individual or small group training sessions. All that is changing. This Sept. 13-15, several PLU volunteer boards will come together for the first time to train and network as a single group.

In addition to the ease of training everyone at the same time, PLU volunteers will have a chance to meet other volunteers from around their region.

The weekend-long event begins with a "Thank You" dinner on Friday. Saturday's general assembly features a group training session with presentations by President Loren Anderson and others. The individual volunteer boards meet Saturday afternoon. They include Parents Council, Q Club Directors, Alumni Board, Admissions Alumni Ambassadors, Class Representatives, and PLU Corporation Delegates.

"The idea is to bring together all PLU volunteer boards into one single volunteer celebration and training event," said Lauralee Hagen, director of alumni and parent relations. "It's not only to train, but to celebrate and thank these wonderful people for their hard work."

If you're on a volunteer board watch for more information on this event or call 206-535-7415 or 1-800-258-6758.

A class without representation is truly in a class by itself!

If you are a graduate of one of the classes listed below, please consider becoming a class representative and assist your fellow classmates in remaining linked to your alma mater. An autumn volunteer recognition and training weekend has been scheduled for Sept. 13-15 that will enable you to meet most class reps as well as other PLU volunteers who are working on behalf of the university. Please call the Alumni and Parent Relations Office at 206-535-7415 or 1-800-258-6758 for more information.

Class Representatives are need for the following class years:

The 1995–96 PLU Alumni Board met for its annual spring meeting May 3–4, led by president Susan Stringer '76. Highlights of the weekend meeting include:

Alumni Services – The Board approved the establishment and endorsement of the PLU signature ring concept currently being reviewed by a campus committee. Look for information about the signature ring in the fall. Other action items included proposing a new class gift from the Alumni Association for graduating seniors, hosting Alumni College at Holden Village in the summer of 1997 and the formation of the CONNECTIONS leadership teams in target areas.

Awards and Nominations – The board approved the following people for the Alumni Awards to be given at Homecoming '96: Distinguished Alumnus/Alumna – Don Morken '60 and

Junet Runbeck '35

Outstanding Alumnus/Alumna – Michael Ford '68 Outstanding Recent Alumnus/Alumna – Kent '85 and Lynell (Haugen) '85 Herzer

Heritage Award – Ron Douglass '53 and Stewart Govig Special Recognition Award – Jane Russell

Mary Connors of Tacoma received the Employee of the Year award in a Feb. 28 ceremony recognizing outstanding employees. She has worked for the Department of Social and Health Services since November 1994 as a clerk typist III, clerical leadworker. Mary's daughter, Colleen, joined the United States Marine Corp in June 1995 and completed boot camp in September. Colleen went to military police training at Ft. McClellen, Ala., for three months and is stationed at Parris Island, S.C. She received a meritorious promotion to PFC upon graduation from military police school.

Stefan Damstrom married Melissa Stuart on June 24, 1995, in Issaquah, Wash., and on Aug. 19, 1995, in Finland. Stefan is the Japan area manager for Phoenix Marketing, Inc. Melissa is an environmental scientist. The couple lives in Redmond, Wash.

Todd and Lolly Hosheins of Issaquah, Wash., announce the birth of twin boys, Conner "D" and McClane Newell on Sept. 13.

Richard and Monica (Ricarte '94)

Hurley were married March 9 at Trinity Lutheran Church in Tacoma.

Their reception was held in PLU's

Chris Knutzen Hall. Richard is a sales representative for MZI – MacZone.

Monica is an admissions counselor at
PLU. They live in Federal Way, Wash.

Kristi Kersten of New York City graduated on May 15 from Columbia University's College of Physicians and Surgeons with a master's degree in occupational therapy.

Brenda Lichtenwalter graduated from Oregon State University in March with a bachelor of science in civil engineering degree. She is now a civil engineer with Fletcher General Construction in Seattle.

Erin Quinn of Denver is enrolled at the University of Denver in the graduate program in the anthropology department. She will be receiving a master of arts in anthropology with a museum studies concentration.

Todd Sandberg of Boise, Idaho, graduated with his master's of science degree in exercise and sports studies from Boise State University in May.

Vidar Skoglund announces the birth of Evine Amalie on Jan. 12. He and his fiance, Line, moved to Tvnsberg, Norway, from Gothenburg, Sweden, where Vidar will take up a position as product manager for Libresse. The town of Tvnsberg is the most popular place in Norway during the summer, so they feel the move is a good one.

Navy Ensign Harvey Beckman reported for duty at Naval Hospital, Twentynine Palms, Galif. He joined the Navy in August 1995.

Darnell and Deborah ('93) Commodore live in Tacoma. Darnell is a technical assistant in the investment department at the Frank Russell Company. Deborah works in the rehab staffing department of Vencor, Inc. (formerly the Hillhaven Corporation).

John DeBoer and Kaia Forde ('94) were married Oct. 21 in a candlelight service at Maple Park Lutheran Brethren Church in Lynnwood, Wash. John is fishing crab in Alaska. After a honeymoon in Hawaii, the couple is home in Snohomish, Wash.

Nancy Alice Keene of Tacoma earned certification as a professional in human resources. The certification, awarded by the Human Resource Certification Institute, signifies that she possesses the theoretical knowledge and practical experience in human resource management necessary to pass a rigorous examination demonstrating a mastery of the body of knowledge in the field.

Lauren Laslie married Bryan Marlatt on Oct. 21 in San Antonio, Texas. James Marron of Des Moines, Iowa, is attending the Drake University School of Law and is on the Dean's List. The board approved a committee to review the current Alumni Board structure and term limits. The board is pleased to offer the following nominations for new Alumni Board members:

Karen Deveney '92, John Feldmann '82, Michael Fuller '94, Bev Knutzen '55, Sandra Krause '89, and Nikki Martin '73

Please vote for candidates for the Alumni Board, both new and returning, using the ballot below. The Board also would like to thank those who have served and who will be leaving the Board: Jon Dahlstrom, Jon Grande, Norene Gulhaugen, Paul Hartman and Jim Hushagen. Their work is very much appreciated and will be missed!

Homecoming – "Framing the Past – Picturing the Future" is the theme of this year's Homecoming, which will take place the weekend of Oct. 12–14. Reunions will be held for the class of '46, '51, '56, '61, '66, '71, '76, '81, '86 and '91. It should be a great weekend and we hope to see all of you. A special focus will be on the 25th anniversary of the University Center and Student Leaders. The Alumni Homecoming Committee continues to work with the oncampus committee made up of students and select university staff. Look for your Homecoming brochure in September.

Student Services – In the fall the board reviewed the list of mentors in LuteLink and learned that LuteLink needed mentors in the following fields: business, education, humanities and physical education. If you are in a field that falls into one of those categories, please contact the Alumni & Parent Relations office. The student services committee met with current students from the recently formed PLU Student Alumni Association. The students shared ideas on how LuteLink could be better marketed and what they could do to help. With the new relationship between the Alumni Board and the student alumni association, the board hopes to sponsor more events for students.

PLU connects with the Olympic Games

ormer roommates and crew teammates Sara Lopez '83 and Elise Lindborg '85 are working behind the scenes with rowing for the Olympic Games held July in Atlanta. And Associate Professor of Physical Education Colleen Hacker is the sports psychologist for the U.S. Women's Soccer Team at the national and Olympic levels.

Sara Lopez '83 is the assistant competition manager for rowing (includes kayaks and canoes) for the Atlanta Committee for the Olympic Games. She is responsible for putting on the competition, scheduling training sites, equipment, recreation, and coordinating support operations for all of the Olympic athletes. She is working with about a thousand athletes at the rowing site, Lake Lanier in Gainsville, Ga. In the off-season, Lopez is director of rowing services for U.S. Rowing. It is headquartered in Indianapolis, but she works out of north Seattle where she lives. She rowed for three years at PLU and coached at UCLA and UW before taking the administrative job with U.S. Rowing.

Elise Lindborg '85 is one of three team managers for the U.S. Rowing Olympic Teams. She is responsible for helping with final selection of the teams, arranging all travel and on-site accommodations, developing a team notebook, drug testing, scheduling practices, etc. This is a volunteer position. Previously she worked for U.S. Rowing in Indiana as international program coordinator (1989-93). She is now a tobacco control field coordinator with the state Department of Health in Scattle, Lindborg was the head women's rowing coach at PLU from 1985-89.

Lopez and Lindborg were roommates in Harstad for a semester in the early '80s at PLU and rowed together under coach Dave "Smed" Peterson.

Associate Professor of Physical Education and former PLU women's soccer coach Colleen Hacker was named the consulting sports psychologist with US Soccer. Primarily, she is working with the 22-member women's national soccer team, 16 members of which will make up the Olympic squad. Hacker, a professor at PLU since 1979, is also on the National Soccer Coaching staff, and is a national speaker on peak performance psychology.

Paul Hoseth, a faculty member and coach at PLU since 1968, has been named athletic director and dean of the School of Physical Education. The fiveyear appointment becomes effective July 1.

Hoseth, 51, will be handed the leadership baton from his longtime friend and mentor, David Olson, who retires June 30 after a 28-year tenure in which he built one of the most successful small college athletic programs in the country.

'Under Dave's leadership, we've had tremendous growth in our program and are looked upon as one of the leaders in the athletic and academic communities in the region. I would certainly hope that those high levels of accomplishment would be sustained and even improved upon," says Hoseth, who has served as the associate dean of the School of Physical Education since 1990.

In addition to his teaching duties, Hoseth has been a PLU assistant football coach since 1968, including serving as the program's defensive coordinator since 1977, and was Pacific Lutheran's head track and field coach from 1969-82. He will relinquish his coaching responsibilities, though he expects to stay actively involved in other ways.

"I would find it difficult to stay away from the practice fields and courts. I will periodically watch practices and be involved as best I can from a different perspective. Any time you have been doing something for the amount of time that I have, to give it up, is not easy. On the other hand, for me the joy was not the winning and losing but the preparing and the competitiveness of the game itself. I think sometimes you can find those kinds of qualities in other activities," he said.

Hoseth earned his undergraduate degree from Concordia College in Moorhead, Minn., his master's in physical education from South Dakota State University, and his doctorate in health education from the University of Oregon in 1977.

"Paul has served Pacific Lutheran, the athletic department and the School of Physical Education with distinction for many years, and has earned the opportunity to lead these programs into the next century," said Olson of his successor. "He has the ability, interest and commitment to do an outstanding job. I'm thrilled that he has been given this chance."

PLU honors 64 athletes at All-Sports Awards Dessert

BY NICK DAWSON

Seventeen individuals received special recognition at PLU's All-Sports Awards Dessert on May 2. In addition, 47 student-athletes earned PLU blankets embroidered with their name to honor them for their four-year participation in an intercollegiate sport.

Sandy Metzger

Matt Sellman

Gavin Stanley

The evening's top awards went to Sandy Metzger as Woman of the Year in Sports, and Matt Sellman and Gavin Stanley, who shared the Jack Hewins Man of the Year in Sports award.

Metzger, a track team captain, has earned All-America honors in track & field three straight years and figures to make it a fouryear sweep at this year's national meet. She has the second fastest time in school history in the 100, 200 and 400 meters.

Both Sellman and Stanley earned first team All-America honors in their respective sports. Sellman, the team captain, helped the Lute men to a seventh-place finish at the NAIA national swimming meet. He earned All-America honors in the 200 freestyle and swam on four relays teams that broke PLU school records. Stanley, a football team captain, helped lead the Lutes into the playoffs for the 14th time in the past 17 seasons. He holds the PLU single-season record for receptions and is second on the school's career receptions list.

In addition, Elise Lindborg and Lyle McIntosh share the 1996 Distinguished Alumnus in Athletics award. Lindborg will serve as a team manager for the 1996 Olympic Games crew team; McIntosh led his Gig Harbor boys basketball team to the Washington State AA Championship.
