

Big dividends show on March paychecks

by Kathleen Hosfeld

"The mistake could have disastrous consequences," stated a business office employee.

According to the business office, the decimal point on an unknown number of student paychecks was omitted. Two-dollar checks became $200, ten dollars became $1000, etc.

The business office had no explanation for the error. "It couldn't be our fault," one secretary said. "The students probably filled out their time sheets wrong."

"If the students decide to keep that money, a lot of people are going to be in hot water," she said.

"Student organizations like the Mast pay their employees out of their own limited budgets. One paycheck could destroy their entire budget."

Since the business office employees do not know how many such checks were given out, they have no idea how much money they overpaid.

"We'll just have to wait till the checks come back."

The business office requests that overpaid students return their checks immediately. Their accounts will be reconciled and the new checks will be available within two months.

"We're really depending on the responsibility of students," said a business office source. "I hope we're not disappointed."

Our president's gone

by Mark Daehlin

The kidnapping of a student at PLU shocked the campus and Tacoma last month. Jim Weyermann, newly-elected ASPLU president was surrounded and carried off by several unidentified persons in front of the University Center early March 15, according to witnesses.

Most vocal about the incident was Dennis Hake, student and former campaign opponent of Weyermann. "It's an obvious coup d'etat by the vice president," Hake told reporters on the 21st. "I'm amazed she hasn't been indicted." Mr. Hake has also demanded that another election be held.

Jean Kunkle, now president of ASPLU, when told of the kidnapping, replied, "Shocking...shocking..." She has passed off Hake's accusations as "unworthy of comment".

It has been reported that Ms. Kunkle was playing Tiddy Winks in the office of Minority Affairs at the time of the kidnapping. When asked about that, she offered "No comment."

The macabre tale has taken several bizarre twists in recent days.

It is rumored that the victim was heard to say, "Et tu, Kunkle" moments before the kidnapping. No confirmation on that as yet.

Several deviant factions on campus, including Campus Security and the UC dishroom, have claimed credit for the kidnapping. A spokesman for the UC dishroom workers said, "We won't be underpaid any more." Workers hummed "Oh, Lord, won't you buy me, a Mercedes-benz" in the background.

Several men from second floor Rainier—some sporting black armbands—have been seen on campus interrogating some people and roughing up others.

One Mast reporter talked to a dark and strangely-dressed female student, known only as "The Oracle at Delta". Said she, "I begged him not to go there on the 15th. I begged him."

ASPLU plans a prayer meeting sometime this coming week at Olson Auditorium. The Spurs will perform "Hedda Gabler", a water ballet with squirt guns. PLU students free with ID, $2.50 for the public.

New treats for dinner

"Come 'N Get It", a new and complete dog and cat food line, is now available from the Carnation Company Milling Division.

Consisting of Dog Dinners, Medium Mix Professional Pack Dog Food, Puppy Food and Cat Dinners, this line has been developed specifically for farmers and ranchers, veterinarians and kennel owners, breeders, sportsmen and pet owners.

Come 'N Get It Dog Dinners are complete meals for dogs of all sizes, ages and breeds. Packed in 50-pound bags, the Dinners may be served dry or mixed with warm water and no pet supplement is needed.

Detailed feeding instructions, ingredients and guaranteed analyses are available on each member of this line by writing the Carnation Company Milling Division.

After an inspiring lecture these students pitch-in as the hat is passed around the class to raise money for PLU-development.

Why not a $30 million goal?

Jill Anderson

A new ski lift will be installed on the south roof of the UC, thanks to a $1.5 million surplus raised by the Development Office.

Previously the office had a goal of raising $16.5 million. The office's determined effort to raise money through various drives started off rather slow last fall when special collections taken during chapel services produced a mere two or three grand. But the project gained momentum, the office exceeded its $16.5 million goal and has now set a new goal of $30 million.

When asked what gave real spark to the overwhelming success of later collections, Vice President for Development Luther Bekemeier commented, "I'll have to give it to you straight. The campaign funding really sky-rocketed when a collection was taken at the end of each class.

"A hat was passed around the room and money came rolling in."

"Entire class hours became open discussions as professors campaigned for new facilities for their respective departments."

"After attaining the new $30 million development goal, each unit of PLU will function at an above-average level of 'Christian education in a Quality context!'"

Bekemeier said that so far the money pouring in has been like stealing candy from a baby. He said the $30 million goal is not ridiculous. "Men walked on the moon, right? And the Huskies won the Rose Bowl, right? So nothing in this universe is unattainable."

In addition to the ski lift being installed, a monorail system will depart from the top of Alpine and enter the UC via the deck of the dining area.

Limousine services will also be available in May from red square.

For the many athletic participants, the Joggerunden is to be covered with a sunroof for rainy weather.

Harstad Hall will be dismantled and the bricks arranged into a giant subway system.

Underground classrooms will include new science department facilities for nuclear testing.

A building will go up next to the library, designed as a place where students can get away from everyone.

With all the money pouring in, PLU feels they should do their part in supporting the community, so instead of letting the county pay for a new sewage treatment facility, PLU will pay.

Architects from France and East Indonesia will be flown in to construct a sanitary sewer system. Foss pond will be turned into the eighth wonder of the world. The natural beauty of the treatment center will be glorified with a suspension bridge over the pond.

When asked if there were any additional fund-raising methods planned, besides passing the hat, Bekemeier said yes. "Just the other day it was suggested that we invest in land at Ocean Shores."

Two days ago, Perry Hendricks was given the financial director of the year award in Washington. Today he will meet with Jimmy Carter to suggest ways to balance the national budget. Story, page three.

"We just weren't thinking when we proposed the wage cuts," said a Career Planning and Placement official. Claiming divine guidance, they now suggest that PLU pay the minimum wage to all students, with retroactive pay. Page six.

Calling it "the toughest decision of my life," Dr. David Olson announced last week that the football program was being scrapped to provide funding for intramurals. Page five.

ASPLU takes risk, offers Beatles concert

by Hilde Bjorhovde

PLU students asked for a "big name group" and they are going to get it. The ASPLU Entertainment Committee announced today that the Beatles will give their reunion concert at PLU on April 9, at 8:15 p.m. in Olson Auditorium.

After some complaints from the students about the entertainment program this year, the committee decided to get in touch with the members of the former group. After negotiating with the four members since November, the committee can promise that the Beatles will come to PLU.

Wayne Anthony, committee chairman, said that UPS has tried to get the Beatles to perform there but could not afford to pay the sum the band wanted. "UPS wasted their money on the Bill Cosby show," he said. "We knew that we could get something better and saved our money for the Beatles." Anthony was not willing to tell how much they will pay for the concert.

"The concert will be really special," he said. "We plan on having some really exciting effects. Without revealing too much, I can say that the Beatles will arrive in a helicopter on red square one hour before the concert. They will tour the campus with Dr. Rieke and members of the Board of Regents."

"There is a chance of getting Janis Joplin and Jimi Hendrix to sing during intermission," Anthony said.

The concert will last two hours and will be covered by national TV. The music performed will be "anything the students ask for". Request forms for song selections can be picked up at the Information Desk. "We want the students to get what they want this time," Anthony said.

Tickets for the concert will be sold at the Information Desk all week. Price per ticket is $1500.

The Beatles

The Beatles will be re-united on the Olson Stage April 9. Tickets are on sale now at the information desk.

Harstad Hall solves dating problem

by Jody Roberts

Security announced today it was making plans to prosecute all 250 residents of Harstad Hall on charges of aiding and abetting a fugitive.

The announcement came after the residents repeatedly refused to give up an unidentified man they had been harboring in the dorm since Tuesday, a security spokesman said.

The officer said that campus security had first become aware of the situation when they received an anonymous phone call at 2:13 a.m. Wednesday. The caller reported that a male was in the all-girl dorm past the 1 a.m. visitation curfew.

"We made a routine check and were able to confirm the report," the officer said. "There was a man in there. However, we couldn't even get in the building. The girls had blockaded the doors and refused to give him up."

The man, who has not been identified, was described by a Harstad resident assistant as being "about six foot one, 170 pounds, and blond. He looks just like Robert Redford."

The RA, who asked not to be identified "because my mother would just die if she read about it," acknowledged that the girls had been hiding the man in the dorm since Tuesday evening.

"I don't know what everyone is getting so upset about," she told the Mast. "Most of the other dorms have a mascot, why can't we?"

The Harstad spokesman said the residents planned to feed the man by bringing sicktrays into the dorm.

"Everyone volunteered to give up one meal a month," she said. "Everyone's really cooperating-its really a joint effort."

"I'd just like to know who it was that reported it to security," she added. "Personally, I think it was one of the girls in Kriedler. They're just mad because they didn't think of something like this first."

The RA said the dorm planned to have the man act as an escort service for the residents.

"It'll only mean about one date a year for each resident, but that's one more than most of us would have otherwise," she said.

When asked about the dorm's reaction to the threat by security to bring action against the residents, she replied, "Well, you only live once."

The man was not available for comment.

School may take summer vacation resulting in first tuition cut in history

A plan which will result in the cancellation of PLU's summer program, enabling the school to cut tuition costs for the first time in its history, has been tentatively approved by the Board of Regents, an administrative official announced Tuesday.

The official said the board reviewed the report of a special committee at its general meeting last month. According to the committee's findings, the university suffers a substantial loss during the summer months due to decreased enrollments and lower tuition, while operational and maintenance costs remain the same.

Because of the university's concern over the relationship of high tuition costs and low retention rate, coupled with the negative feedback accompanying the last tuition hike, the board decided to completely cut the summer sessions in order to decrease student costs.

The tuition decrease, the first in the school's history, is estimated to be as high as 24 percent, the official said.

"To my knowledge this is the first time anything of this nature has been attempted by any Northwest school. I know a number of schools have discussed the possibility in the past, but none have ever actually gone through with it."

The official, who asked not to be identified until the official university announcement is made, stressed that the decision was only tentatively approved, this time.

"The decision was made in light of what would be best for the students. If a large number of students oppose the plan, particularly those who need to earn credits over the summer, the board will certainly review its decision. It's really up to student reaction whether the board decides to formalize its decision or not."

If the plan is formally approved by the regents, it will go into operation immediately "in order to best serve student interests and ease financial burdens," he said.

He added the university is now negotiating with the University of Puget Sound to work out a transfer program within the UPS summer program so that students at PLU can earn credits that are transferable to PLU and are based on PLU tuition costs.

"We want to make sure the proposal can go into effect with few or no drawbacks. If it can work with no negative reaction on our students, it's just great."

Daniels wins Pulitzer Prize

by Dwight Daniels

Dwight Daniels, Offshoot Editor of the Mooring Mast, will be presented the Pulitzer Prize award in Washington, DC the first week in May.

"I'm overwhelmed," said Daniels when contacted by the Associated Press. "I had no idea

I was even in contention for the award."

The award is presented annually by the Graduate School of Journalism at Columbia University.

A spokesman said, "Daniels was selected for the Pulitzer because his work consistently displayed a total selfless dedication to mankind."

In a traditional ceremony, President Carter will present the award to Daniels.

Daniels, who began as Offshoot editor this past semester, said "I will donate the $15,000 to the Mooring Mast. The Mast needs the money to buy a new input-output machine since our other one is about to fall apart."

End to overflow hassles

by Sandra Braaten

There will be no overflow problem at PLU next fall, Dr. Jerry Stringer, director of the residential life office, announced happily today.

But the rest of the PLU officials are in a state of panic. Only five people have applied to enter PLU next term.

James Van Beek, director of admissions, was last seen boarding a plane for Katmandu, Nepal, and was unavailable for comment.

The admissions office is not entirely to blame. The Group to Inform Possible Pupils of Eventual Doom (GIPPED), an underground alumni movement, has apparently sabotaged PLU's mailing list.

GIPPED reportedly sent a pamphlet to all prospective freshmen, warning them not to apply. These pamphlets contained the "truth" about PLU.

One of the entering freshmen, Dick Dimbrane of Gackle, North Dakota, gave his view of the GIPPED movement. "They are just a bunch of pinko commie rats," he said. It may be noted that PLU was the only university to offer him admission.

GIPPED President Justice Foreall stated that the PLU admissions office sent out the usual amount of information. "It included the same bunk that generally fools enough people to keep PLU populated," he said.

GIPPED decided to act this year "to save others from our fate," as Foreall said.

PLU officials are taking action immediately to clear the university's name. Dr. Rieke has prepared a statement to be released soon, denying anything and everything the pamphlet might have said.

Meanwhile, prospects are poor for PLU. Dr. Rieke has frequently been heard to mutter "Revenge!" in a Christian context, it is assumed.

Outside detectives were called in when George, a female black lab was run over. George was 6.

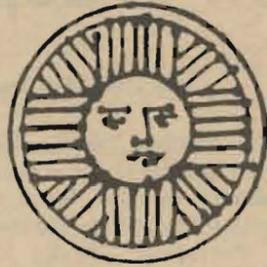

New Interim course: Tanning 101 The Worship of the Sun Gods

by Mark Morris

While it's a little early to be registering for Interim 1979, Sue Clarke of the provost's office has announced one of next year's courses.

Of prime interest to those who wish to study abroad, what better way to study a broad than on the white sand beaches of Maui? Clarke stated that this class, entitled "Sun Tanning 101, the Worship of the Sun Gods" had been established upon request of 75 PLU football players.

Sun Tanning 101 will consist of 21 days in the sun soaking up the golden rays on Maui, Hawaii's second largest island. The activities of the course will be limited to developing a super summer suntan in the middle of the winter.

Due to the tremendous response to the course on behalf of the football team, Frosty Westering has been appointed to instruct the course.

Westering pointed out some of his theories of the course by saying, "Let me share this with you. You just can't measure yourself against anyone but yourself. And that's true with sun tanning, too." Each student will be graded on his own suntan. Westering added, "It just wouldn't be fair to compare a guy like Kris Morris with, say, Prentis Johnson."

Selection of oils and creams as well as rotation schedules will be left up to the students.

Clarke stated that due to the influx of students enrolling in community college courses to meet university requirements, "Sun Tanning 101, The Worship of the Sun Gods", which meets the general university requirement of a 4-credit religion course, will be offered for $89. Plane fare, hotel accommodations and board are included.

You ought to be in pictures, but not this one

by Brad Jenson

Bob Torrens, director of food service, may never win an award for his meals, but he does stand a chance to win an Academy Award for directing a recent movie. The stars of the movie are you, the students,

$3 million busy signal

Nearly three million dollars was lost yesterday when a potential donor was unable to reach the campus by telephone.

"I tried seven times," she told the Tacoma News Tribune. "Each time I called PLU I got a busy signal."

Frustrated by her inability to get through, Mrs. Joan Brooks of San Francisco asked Tacoma information if there were any other colleges in the area.

"I've always liked Tacoma," she said. "I was happy to find that I could give to a Tacoma school even though I couldn't reach PLU."

Officials at the University of Puget Sound announced that the gift brought their development fund drive to $15 million.

doing things that may be quite embarrassing.

According to Torrens, he first got the idea for the movie when he was approached by three film-art students interested in making a movie about people eating.

There are several sequences showing food fights. In one instance, a student has a close encounter of the "curd" kind when he is almost struck by a saucer of cottage cheese.

There are also many cases of students smuggling food out of the dining area. Some students used rather unorthodox methods.

A girl from Kreidler was observed placing sugar packets down the front of her blouse. Torrens remarked that it is unfortunate that her image will be deflated when the film is released.

A male student with a provocative walk was filmed leaving the cafeteria after appearing to have tucked an article of food under his belt. (Obviously a fruit).

Torrens also pointed out that the unusual habits of some students came through. In particular, one student sat near the wall and attempted to throw Fritos into a ventilation fan.

"All I can say," remarked Torrens, "is when a chip hits the fan, there's going to be a lot of trouble."

Torrens noted that food fights are against the regulations and indicated that the film will be used as evidence against the students, who will be brought before Judicial Board.

George hit by Security; dies waiting for help

by Karen Pierce

George, the black lab who frequented upper-campus dorms with pine cones in his mouth, died Wednesday after being hit by a security car. He was 11.

"I didn't see him coming at all," said the driver. "I just glanced at this pine cone skidding by the car, and then something smacked the front and geez, what a howl!"

George was unconscious when eyewitnesses ran to the scene. Though rushed to the Health Center, he died while awaiting medical attention.

"It was pathetic," said an eyewitness. "Those people couldn't decide what account to bill for the medical fee. And you could tell he was fading fast. Somebody brought a cone and gave it to him in the end. You could see he died happy."

No one knows who George belonged to, though Hong Hall claims they had adopted him as their mascot. "He was his own dog," Ordal's head resident said.

Hong is leading a memorial drive by setting aside matching funds from the dorm. If enough money is garnered, a bronze pine cone will be cast and set on a revolving iron shaft in Ordal's square.

Memorial services will be held tomorrow in Tower Chapel. Offerings may be earmarked for the memorial fund.

Kris Morris proclaimed 1978 Lucia Groom

Mark Morris

by Mary Peterson

With a flick of a switch the electric candles in the crown were turned on, revealing Kris Morris to be the 1978 Lucia Groom. A capacity crowd watched the ceremony last night in Eastvold Chapel. The attendants are Mike Catron and Phil Earley.

A junior from Tacoma, Morris was chosen by the students for his chastity and purity. He is 48-32-32. Further measurements were not disclosed.

Catron said, "Both Phil and I are not disappointed that we didn't get it. We're so happy for Kris. He deserved to be crowned."

The Lucia Groom legend

dates back to 1655 in Norway when a Christian lad backed out from an arranged marriage to a pagan wench and chose to remain a virgin. Following tradition, the girl's family sentenced him to be burned at the stake.

At the public execution, the flames wrapped themselves around the lad but did not scorch him. He has since been canonized and in his memory guys have been getting lit up and girls are the only ones burned.

Today this is the patron saint of PLU males and the tradition of celibacy is carried on. Guys rise early on the shortest day of winter and gather to watch the sunrise through the Rune Stones and to renew their vows of virginity.

Rieke sells carnations, now in deprogramming

by Dave Morehouse

The dismissal of two PLU administrators is being considered by the Board of Regents following the discovery of President Rieke at Seattle-Tacoma International Airport.

Perry Hendricks, vice-president of finance and operations, and Milt Nesvig, assistant to the president on church relations, are believed to have been involved in the disappearance of Dr. Rieke and the subsequent cover-up.

The president disappeared over two months ago, and was found last week wandering around Sea-Tac in a glassy-eyed trance. Student Marshall Jewell recognized the clean-cut Rieke when the president tried to sell him a flower.

"I was shocked," said Jewell. "I tried to think of what my parents or the Board of Regents would have done if they were here, so I bought the flower and called Security."

Security Chief Rick Shaver

arrived at the Sea-Tac airport two days later to escort Rieke home.

Suspicion was first directed toward Hendricks and Nesvig following remarks made by Rieke to Shaver on the way home. "The poor guy is plumb crazy," drawled Shaver.

"He kept talking about getting all the PLU students to sell candy and flowers in bus stations for the endowment drive, so Hendricks and Nesvig could get money for their 'mission group'. Then he tried to sell me a flower. Sounds like one of them Moonies to me. But I still got the flower. Purty thing, ain't it?"

Long suspected of having ties with Korean businessmen and religious leaders, Hendricks and Nesvig are now generally believed to be members of Sun-Myung Moon's Unification Church.

Hendricks and Nesvig are now suspected to have persuaded Rieke to spend a weekend with a "youth group". He was apparently brainwashed to join the group. Hendricks and Nesvig then staged an elaborate cover-up, using tapes of Rieke's voice and three-dimensional projectors to hoax the campus.

After Rieke's indoctrination into the "youth group", Hendricks and Nesvig apparently wanted Rieke to turn PLU into a camp for members of his "youth group", and use PLU's endowment drive to supplement the Moonies' coffers.

The two administrators were vague as to Rieke's whereabouts during the previous two months, but denied any connection between their actions and the Reverend Sun-Myung Moon and the Unification Church.

"Honest, we're doing it for our 'Christian youth group,'" said Hendricks, flower in lapel. "And if I hear anything about us being Moonies, I'll transfer the Mooring Mast funds to the women's soccer club."

Rieke, who was being deprogrammed, was not available for comment.

Non-Norskies group meets in fear

by Kris Weathermon

A new organization has been formed to protect the rights and dignity of PLU's most neglected minority, the non-Norskies. The group calls itself the Norskies-nots and meets monthly at prearranged locations such as dormitory closets.

There are only five official Norskies-nots, but the group's president (who asked not to be identified for reasons of personal security) estimated that there should be at least ten or twenty additional non-Norskies at PLU.

"It's just that we're afraid to stand up and be counted," said the president. "The Norskies majority is just too overwhelming."

"There is an unbelievable amount of attention devoted to the Norskies master race here on this campus," he said. "We Norskies-nots would like to see such racist activities as the Lucia Bride Festival eliminated."

"The PLU vocabulary should be cleansed of such racist terms as uff-da and Joggerunden. And sports fans should be spared from hearing nonsense Norskies cheers at ballgames. If such cheers must be used for the sake of team spirit they should be purged of Norskies affiliations. A possible substitution might be: tuna fish, tuna fish, pizza, pizza..."

If you are a non-Norskies who might be interested in joining the Norskies-nots, call (omitted for security reasons).

Security car impounded

A PLU security patrol car was towed away and impounded last night by a Pierce County Deputy.

The incident reportedly occurred at 1 a.m. while a security patrolman was ticketing a Stuen coed for parking illegally in the Stuen parking lot.

The patrolman became embroiled in a conversation and failed to notice that his patrol car was illegally parked in front of a private driveway on 120th.

The patrolman was discussing parking with the coed in her car. Unfortunately, both cars were towed off together—the security patrol and the Stuen coed still in the coed's car.

No charges have been filed against either.

Bookstore includes among stock Sounds of PLU record album

by Mary Peterson

The bookstore has received new stock designed exclusively for PLU students.

A record has just been released entitled "Sounds From PLU's Memory Lane".

The jacket cover reads: "This album is a definite must for every Lute. It's a collection of those noises you'll long to hear again after you graduate. Here is a once in a lifetime collectors item. Who knows what this record will be worth in ten years."

The title track is noise from a cash register followed by "The Processional of Joy".

Side one includes the tide as it rolls in and hits the shore of Foss pond, coughing and fainting in the Health Center, bathroom noises at 3 a.m. and fire drills at 5 a.m.

Also on side one are comments from the cooks as they prepare the food, the Non-Lettermen singing, rain dropping and the announcement that the library is closing.

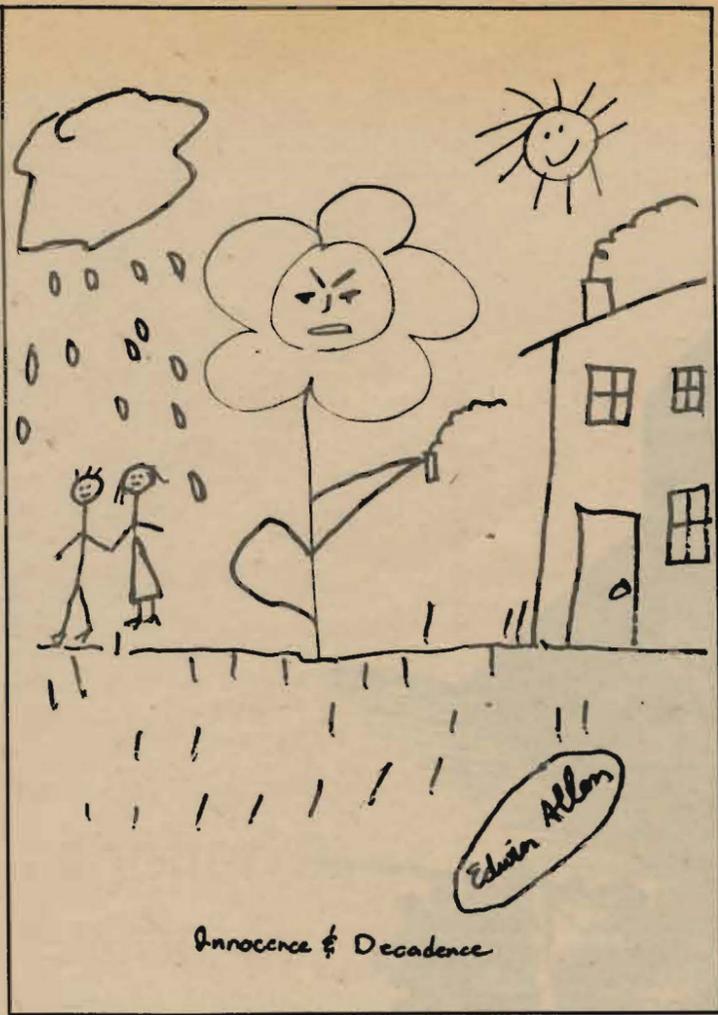

On side two are: cuts from the top 10 lectures of the year complete with airplane interruptions, failures at choir tryouts, calculators hitting the floor during finals, beer cans opening and those hard to forget noises from the Eastvold practice rooms.

A special selection in this volume is the noise from the Tinglestad elevator as it nears the fifth floor.

Another new item in the bookstore is a book for freshman entitled "How to Avoid Embarrassing Freshman Moments".

The book features how to pronounce names such as Xavier and Pflueger, how to cheat washing machines, which profs are easiest, eating etiquette in the UC and CC and 15 believable ways to answer an RA's knock at the door.

The bookstore also has the latest PLU souvenirs. New in stock are PLU placemats for the study carrels in the library and PLU rape whistles.

Services will be held for the entire Mast staff tomorrow night at the nearest Jack-in-the-Box. The editor will officiate.

The Mast staff committed mass suicide last Thursday night while working at the printing plant in Kent, Washington.

According to the only survivor, the editor, the staff committed suicide by stabbing each other with exacto knives after discovering that their bylines would be run above their stories.

Afraid of being sent to Washington State Mental Institution, the staff decided to kill each other before the paper hit the stands.

All positions are now open. Anyone interested in applying for a position on the Mast staff should practice ordering a Jumbo Jack and a large coke.

This will qualify you for any position on the staff.

It is also suggested that you BYOE. That is—Bring Your Own Exacto. The exacto supply was depleted on Thursday night.

Instead of flowers please send either cash or checks payable to the Mast. All donations will go towards purchasing new composition equipment and straight jackets.

"True to life" art on display

by Chris Connerly

Edwin Allen's collection of existential art will be on display in Mortvedt Library April 7 for a brief showing.

The showing will last approximately ten minutes, beginning at 10:30 and ending promptly at 10:40. The shortness of the display is due to the excessive popularity of Allen's art.

As the famous art critic, Sam Hill said, "Allen's work is a major breakthrough in existential art. It hits people where they live. No one can just glance at the art and look away. It's compelling and fanciful, yet at the same time repelling and true to life. I know that I for one can really relate to it."

Two of Allen's most famous works will be included in the showing. The first one took Allen two years to finish because, as he put it, "I was too busy experiencing life to have time to portray the meaning."

The picture is called "Life is a Trip" and features a sailboat, a fish, and faces. It was acclaimed by critic Alder Masconowitz as being "a masterpiece which captures all the elements of good existential art.... lots of good lines and a mass of symbolic images."

The second work, "Innocence and Decadence", took Allen four minutes of concentrated effort to produce.

Allen said that it is one of his favorite works because, "the symbolism is so symbolic. I mean it's there and it exists and reveals man's inner turmoil and outer despair. It shows the false facade of happiness and the tormented mass of naked emotions that lies beneath."

The picture is filled with images, the most striking of which is a huge, frowning flower smoking a cigar. The meaning of the work may be clear to Allen, but many viewers are confused by its complexity.

Viewers have been noted as saying such things as, "That's art?" and "I don't understand it and I don't think I want to."

In spite of opinions such as these, many critics believe that Allen's art is sure to catch on. According to Hill, Allen's work may some day take the place of Norman Rockwell's as a portrayal of American Life.

3 profs tenured, 57 fired

by Mary Peterson

Three professors have been granted tenure and 57 have been fired. An ex-member of the rank and tenure committee said, "I don't understand this record number of firings. I don't know what went wrong, but I bet it was those new committee members who just didn't understand the procedure. They probably went back and reread the rules."

An English professor said, "Someone told me the reason for all of us getting fired was those student evaluations, but I dunno. I thought they were always used. I have always been kind to students. When they wanted an extension on their assignments I always gave it to them. And when everyone complained about their grades I always gave it to them. Oh well, I don't have no complaints."

A psychology professor said,

"I really don't know what to think. My teaching was just fine. Students never had any questions. There were no class disruptions. They took it all in. This whole thing is beyond comprehension."

A philosophy professor said, "I plan to go to a state university where this type of thing won't happen to me. I really need my job security. This pay is not enough motivation. I have to be secure in the knowledge that whatever I do won't affect anything."

An anatomy professor said, "I took a stab at it, but I guess I'm not cut out to teach."

Looking for lost innocence...

Knight Shorts' dear Donny recently asked his audience for letters about their sexual problems. But nobody answered. Could it be, Don, that everything's alright between the sheets? But no! I didn't even know what a sexual problem was until I came to PLU.

I remember my first glimpses of lechery as a freshman last year. The highlight of fall semester was searching magazine ads for hidden sex in—yes—ice-cubes. Later, some male friends took turns blacking out the most titillating parts of my one-n-only PLAYGIRL. The most pleasing caress I got was a backrub; the big date was jogging out to that phallic symbol of Spire Rock. And an anonymous David taped dirty notes to my door. Wow!

Finally this year—a boyfriend. And a whole new set of problems. Where do you go for a private kiss in a dorm, especially during rush hour at 10 p.m.? What do you do when you can't kick your roommate out? Or when you and sweetie spend the night in the ironing room, only to wake to the sound of someone trying his key in the lock? And then, when dawn is breaking and you realize you've locked your key in your room, how do you face your RA when you're carrying two blankets and two pillows?

I had thought college was a social wonderland, not wasteland. What happened to the legendary loss of innocence, to the tallies scratched in the bedboards with every 'score'? What happened to fun-n-games? Or class of '44? When was the last time you got a pinch on the butt?

...and a quality tobacco

The recent award given to Pacific Lutheran University for cultural enrichment is well deserved. The award, given by the Foundation For Future Elitists, was given to PLU for the outstanding number of PLU students who have met the "Diverse Student" honor roll.

Over eight students were judged on their ability to communicate interpersonally with a variety of people regardless of sex, race, height, socio-economic status and religion. The poll was taken after the students graduated.

PLU ranked above Harvard, Yale and Cornell in point production with 3890 enrichment points compared to Harvard's 3889 points. A spokesman for the university attributed the receipt of the award to the Coffee Hour Policy, a policy started during the Eastvold administration in the 1960's.

There are no classes during this hour—only talk. All the administrators and PLU students gather in the coffee shop to discuss the "real world" and the value of the dollar.

The Coffee Hour Policy was considered by one member of the FFFE as "above and beyond the call of duty" for a private university. The atmosphere in the coffee shop is deemed one of the more stimulating in preparation for the "real world".

Discussions between faculty, administrators and students often lead in a quest for a quality tobacco.

All students are invited to the Coffee Hour. The cost is $4,000 annually. Prices subject to go up without notice.

Professor 'gonged' at faculty senate

To the editor:

In reviewing the issue of my being gonged at the faculty-senate meeting, I find great cause for rebuttal. I write, then, to clarify the issue and to prove by the deductive method that, all things being equal, I was done an injustice.

I speak not from a transcendent point of view but an ontological one. Therefore, the question of whether my action was (as in "to be") an appropriate one, is the focus of my rebuttal.

To fully understand the nature of my action—whistling "A Mighty Fortress is Our God" as an invocation to the meeting—we must analyze it piece by piece: we must take each detail and consider its meaning in the light of our massive Christian heritage; we must, will, and shall prove that the very nature of this action was unworthy of a gong.

Two basic points need to be covered. First, we must consider the act of whistling. In the beginning were Adam and Eve and they were good. God tells us this.

However, if one looks closely in the chapter of Genesis and reads between the lines, we see that Adam was not only good, but he was also good at whistling. What do you suppose Adam was doing when the Lord asked Eve after she had eaten of the sacred tree, "What is this that you have done?" Why, we was whistling, of course.

What else does anyone do when frightened or hoping an evil will pass unnoticed? Of course only a scholar of true ability and determination could have discovered the hidden implications suggested in this account.

Thus from the beginning whistling has been a part of the great Christian heritage. Noah invented the two-finger whistle when he called the animals into the Ark.

Moses used the shrill whistle to get the attention of the people when he returned and found them worshipping pagan idols. Later, the Roman Catholics turned whistling into a penance. Perhaps that is where that wonderful little tune, "Whistle While you Work", came from. (Forgive the dwarfs for their sins and Snow White, too.)

Finally, when Martin Luther broke off from the main church, whistling underwent its final status change. Along with free grace came free whistling. Yes, free whistling. And joy came into the hearts of all Lutherans and their choirs sounded of the birds.

Close your eyes and imagine for a moment. What greater proof does one need of the fine tradition of whistling? I ask you, is that tradition worthy of a gong?

However, if you are yet in doubt, consider the second point—the song. It seemed only appropriate when the idea for an invocation struck me that "A Mighty Fortress Is Our God" be the choice.

After all, was it not written by that great man himself, Martin Luther? Written in the early 16th century, the hymn has been a tradition for nearly 400 years. Yes, 400 years. Need I say more for tradition?

But if tradition is not enough, consider the lyrics. Of course whistling and singing are incompatible activities (mutually exclusive as the scholar would say) and one loses the true feeling of the profound words of this great hymn in the transition.

However, with the addition of facial expression a new dimension is achieved. For instance, while whistling the melody which accompanies the lyrics, "bulwark never failing," one can create a bulwark effect by lowering the eyebrows, scrunching the face, and puffing out the cheeks until they resemble a concrete wall.

Expression is a simple concept, but how often it is overlooked. With all this song has to offer, and with its opportunities for personal interpretation, I simply cannot fathom why the hymn merited a gong.

Although by now my argument has been effectively made, I offer a few summary comments. Surely the action of whistling combined with my own humble interpretations was not worthy of a gong.

My intentions were good. I knew the heritage I was upholding; I knew the solemn effect the invocation could bring about; I knew what I was doing and I was proud. Yet, in spite of all this I was gonged. What an injustice.

Certainly anyone can see now from the arguments given here that the appropriateness of my action is proven. What it is, based on what it was, makes its being transmutable (as opposed to transubstantiated) into one of the finer actions ever undertaken at a faculty senate meeting.

The real problem with debate

To the editor:

On Feb. 17 PLU sponsored a high school debate tournament, an interesting experience for both the high school students and the university students. However, this experience was marred by what looked like a lack of adequate planning. If anyone tried to use any of the University Center facilities they understand the utter confusion that occurred.

The real problem was the

New sports facility for women by Freddy Water complex last Tuesday has given the women of this institution a much needed athletic facility.

The completion and dedication of the Weigman

With the passage of Title IX, women in colleges and universities throughout the country have been given the opportunity to receive equal funds, equal and separate facilities in their sports programs.

According to an officer in the women's P.E. department, this new water complex is the first of its kind in the Pacific Northwest.

The un-cut, natural setting of the complex will enable PLU women to experience swimming, diving and kayaking in an aesthetic context. A 2½ foot bridge-like diving platform enhances the beauty of the facility.

Title IX also means that the entire women's intramural sports scene at PLU will improve drastically, says a spokesperson for the Director of PLU women's Intramural Program. New equipment was one of the first benefits of Title IX.

Frisbees were received from the same company that provides chicken fried steak for PLU. Although the frisbees are somewhat smaller than normal, their toughness and leather texture will no doubt tickle the heart of many a coed out for a fling.

Living up to motto: All dorms created equal

Residential Life is living up to its motto "All dorms are created equal" by renovating the less equal dorms.

"Coed drawing was really getting to be a hassle, plus all those threats and bribes from students wanting to get out of their present dorm, well it was all too much," said the director for Residential Life.

Foss Hall will get most of the refurbishing. All the rooms will have an air purification system installed. Also since the compactness of the dorm's rooms is a problem, every other wall will be knocked out and instead of two rooms there will be one larger room.

Ordal is one of the most requested dorms and to decrease its appeal garbage collection will be limited to monthly.

Stuen, another popular dorm, will have guaranteed candle-passings. All the study lamp lights have been kicked out and candles and matches will be passed out daily.

Masked marauders sneak in Remember those masks of Dr. Rieke and Chris Keay the Mooring Mast ran last October for Halloween?

Apparently numerous men have been caught using the masks to enter Harstad and Kriedler after visitation hours.

When the head resident of Kriedler saw "Chris Keay" enter the dorm 20 times in less than a half hour, she became concerned.

In Harstad, a 6'4" Dr. Rieke carrying a basketball attempted to get into the dorm. Fortunately the head resident realized that all he and all the other "Dr. Rieke's" she had let in were imposters.

She awakened the dorm by starting a fire drill at 4 a.m. According to the latest reports, over 50 "Dr. Rieke" and "Chris Keay's" have been accounted for since the drill.

All men will be sent to J-Board and charged with impersonating a president.

Jimmy Carter visited Harstad immediately following the drill.

Ferry Sinks

The super ferry that ASPLU rented for next week's formal sunk yesterday. On an evening run to Bremerton it ran into an iceberg. There were no casualties.

An Entertainment Committee spokesman said, "We're looking into the possibility of getting a supertanker in the sound, or else having the dance on Seattle Metro buses. Also we just got word on a really cheap deal on a DC-10 to Edmonds and back.

ASPLU presents Spooktacular II tonight in the UC. This promises to be one of the biggest ASPLU attractions of the year. Get there early to beat the crowd. Chris promised if there were too many people, the party would move to his office upstairs.

The Alcohol policy will be shelved for another semester while RHC and the Board of Regents decide whose turn it is to mix the drinks. Yes, RHC has shaken up PLU a little bit; John didn't realize martini's need an olive and not a maraschino cherry. And since you can't take your prof to your room try Len's—every Tuesday is PLU night.

If I didn't owe a friend in Stuen a personal favor I wouldn't tell you about the Stuen dance. But I must. They are dull, boring, and omnipresent. But don't let that bother you, Stuen residents thrive in that kind of atmosphere. Tonight, 6:30-11:00. But check out the College Drive-in first. Be there and be square.

Tune in to Knight Shorts next week as the staff drops their drawers to present the bare facts. Jim and Elaine promise to tell funny jokes this time. And don't miss Don and the weather report. (Don still doesn't know what he wants to be when he grows up, so just humor him folks). Pretend he's funny.

If you really want to hear a top comedian and laugh yourself silly visit Tacoma's other university for Bill Cosby's performance. Sorry Wayne. Oh well, he's probably better on television, records and in films, than he is in person. Maybe PLU can get a top entertainer some day too.

This week's CAMPUS SALUTE goes to the business office. If you're ever down and out and need someone to cheer you, just stop by and say "hi" to Dawn, Betty and Pat. They won't let you go away with that empty handed feeling, just an empty savings account, checking account or pocket book. And don't forget your ID card!

Hot off the presses. The 1977 Saga that you have been waiting and waiting and waiting for is finally here. But don't you get too excited, all that will be distributed are the covers. The organizations and sports sections should be here by next year and if everything goes smoothly the remaining pages will be in your eager hands by the time your federal loans are due!

Proposal will be action item for Regents

by Geri Hoekzema

The latest visitation proposal, which was formulated by the visitation ad hoc committee, will go to the April regents' meeting as an action item. Before then, however, students were given a chance to ask questions and air opinions at the RHC/Senate forums in the dorms. Students' votes on the proposal have been taken.

The proposal states that all students have the rights to "sleep, study, privacy, access to one's room, and voluntary interaction with others." Given those rights, individual students would work out visitation policies with their roommates.

According to the proposal, the dorm council in each hall will have the right to establish "common courtesy" rules regarding security, quiet hours, dress, and disruptive behavior.

The new proposal differs from the original one in that decisions will be up to each room rather than the wing or dorm. And by allowing students to move to other rooms if an agreement cannot be reached, it will protect the rights of all students.

One year after the new policy has taken effect, an evaluation to determine whether the arrangement is "growth producing" would be made. The evaluation would be set up by a steering committee of Sociology and Psychology faculty and students.

On March 14, RHC, Senate, Dr. Rieke and the ad hoc committee met to discuss the benefits and drawbacks of the proposal.

One rationale for the new proposal is that it will give students the responsibility of acting as mature adults by letting them make their own decisions.

The role of the RA would not be reduced to that of a police. Instead, RA's would possibly be given special training in mediating problems between roommates.

Cooperative interaction between roommates would also be encouraged by the new policy since roommates will be working out their own problems.

This will help staff or residents spot any unescorted persons who may have no right to be in the dorm.

Another source of disagreement was whether the RA should be made aware of each room's decision and whether it would help.

Possible loss of financial support from constituencies was again a major concern. Some people also expressed concern that Pflueger's protest will not help the fund drive.

Certain administrators seemed to feel that peer pressure would compel some students to go along with the new policy against their own wills. Some of this pressure may be eliminated by the secret ballot voting.

Doris Schnackenberg thumbs through a stack of financial aid forms. If your application isn't in there now it may be too late.

Aid forms now overdue

by Dave Morehouse

So you think you aren't getting enough money in your Financial Aid package from PLU. Therefore, you plan to transfer to another school in Washington where you might receive more aid.

Well, if you haven't turned in a Financial Aid Form to the school of your choice, you're about out of luck. Deadlines for filing financial aid forms at Washington colleges range from as early as February 1 for the University of Washington to April 1 at Western Washington University.

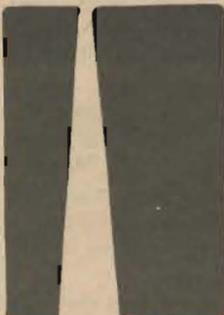

Continuing PLU students are due to receive their Financial Aid award notices on May 1, according to Kristin Blancett, Assistant Director for Financial Aid. If there is any delay, notices will be put up notifying students of the new date. To avoid the hassles of campus mail, the Financial Aid award notices are hand-delivered to the dorms. Some students will receive their award notices at a later date, due to the amount of information needed to process their form.

PLU's deadline for filing financial aid forms is April 1 for continuing students and March 1 for transfer students and incoming freshmen. Financial Aid packages for freshmen have already been granted.

Transferring to other schools can be done through the summer, but the deadline to file for Financial Aid at most of these institutions is already past.

The one exception is the Evergreen State College, whose filing deadline for financial aid forms is May 15.

Mast, Saga editors chosen

by Kris Weathermon

Allison Arthur has been chosen as next year's Mooring Mast editor-in-chief, while Joye Redfield will serve as Saga editor for 1978-79.

Allison Arthur, a first-semester senior Communications Arts major, is currently managing editor of the Mast. She has also worked on the Saga staff, been a member of the Knight Shorts production team, and held a part-time position on the editorial staff of the Pierce County Herald. Her present career goal is to work as the editor of a weekly newspaper.

Joye Redfield

Arthur's major concern is whether or not the Mast will be able to purchase a new composing unit. She and the other Mast editors recently ran in the jog-a-thon to help raise money for the $15,000 unit.

Arthur plans no major changes in the Mast's format. She plans to continue the Offshoot section, but would like to see it become more crafts oriented. She plans to include more off-campus news and entertainment information and perhaps a sports column and a political column.

There are still openings available for photographers, typists, and writers. All interested persons should contact the Mast at ext. 437.

Redfield does not know yet whether she will use the magazine format next year, but her decision will be made this spring. An important factor in this decision will be how much money is budgeted to the yearbook, for the magazine-style Saga costs less to produce than a hardcover book.

Redfield thinks that if the magazine format is used again next year many problems could be alleviated. She feels that producing a magazine-style yearbook is a good learning experience for students since the skills involved are very applicable in the journalistic world.

If the magazine format is continued Redfield would like to issue the first edition, containing photos of all students, in late October.

Redfield also wants to sell advertising for the Saga to help cover expenses. She said that several fundraising projects are needed because "in order to get the type of yearbook we want, we've got to work for the money."

Redfield added that anyone willing to work on the Saga staff would be most welcome. She especially needs good photographers.

by Sandra Braaten

David Frye, a well-known impressionist, will perform in Olson Auditorium at 8:15 p.m. on April 15, during Parent's Weekend. Tickets will be $2 for students, $3 for non-students.

Frye became a national figure during the Johnson and Nixon administrations through his impressions of the two presidents. Since then he has expanded his repertoire to include many political and Hollywood figures.

The impressionist is currently doing Nixon, Carter, William F.

Buckley, Kirk Douglas, Kissinger, and Patton, among others.

The opening act will be Boden and Zenetto, who will perform jazz and ragtime. Their act is a nostalgic look at the Roaring Twenties. They play guitar and honky-tonk piano.

Activities Advisor Rick Eastman says their act is "unique and appealing."

Boden and Zenetto will perform again the same evening, from 10 to 12 p.m. in the Cave.

Other entertainment for the weekend will include the Sea Sprites' "Aquatic Encounters of the Third Kind". The PLU Liturgical Dance Ensemble will perform "Dance Tapestry". There will also be a variety show put on by the Parent's Weekend committee in conjunction with Alpha Psi Omega.

Non-L's elude NBC's gong

by Jill Anderson

The musical marvel of PLU—the Nonlettermen—tallied a whalloping 26 points in Hollywood on the "Gong Show".

Performance of the Lute hit "Young Blood" aroused the live studio audience Easter Sunday.

Celebrity panelists on NBC's talent critique, "The Gong Show" evaluated the Non-L's over-all style. The climb to stardom was complete with the receipt of second prize (including macaroni, Prince Gardner leather accessories, carry-all kits, a lamp, paint and cosmetics).

Panelists J.P. Morgan and Pat McCormick rated the "Non-L's" with nine out of 10 point scores and Morgan revealed, "I wouldn't mind making bed sheets out of them." I'll bet King Kong's wife would like a necklace made out of them," added McCormick.

The third judge is known—or unknown—as the Unknown

Comic, who may be distinguished by the paper bag over his head, and who credited the group with an eight rating...for some unknown reason.

Mark Reiman, pianist, recounted the history of the adventure. "It started way back. There was talk when we were sophomores to get on 'The Gong Show', but it never really materialized. This spring, in the middle of planning for a Palm Springs vacation, we decided 'why not go for it'. The show's phone number flashed on the screen. I phoned up and asked for Chuck Barris, told him about the act, and got an appointment for auditioning 5 p.m. March 17."

The initial audition was held in front of a video tape crew and filming took place after some background questions.

An entry form was returned with an "A" grade scrawled across the top ("First 'A' I've gotten in college," said Kris Morris.) NBC studio called Tuesday confirming their approval of the act and Chuck Barris asked to see the group.

Barris offered the singers a contracted appearance on Happy Days in which they would guest star on a segment of the series, stated Morris.

"I thought we had a good chance for the job, but Mark Accimus (Jiggles) failed the nude screen test. Chuck loved us," Reiman said, "They went out of their way and treated us super."

The Non-L's appeared on the second segment filmed. Waiting for their turn was nerve-racking, but watching the other acts built up their confidence. They figured they could have taken first place on the first segment.

The gentlemen sang in front of a crowd of 250. Mark Reiman even winked at J.P. Morgan. At the close of the show, Barris awarded the trophy and the Non-L's gated—as an extra added feature.

The show will be aired either April 11th or April 18th at 11:30 a.m. on NBC Channel 5. Watch for the spectacular stardom break-through of the Nonlettermen before their break-up.

A squabble over the prizes occurred after the show as Kris Morris accounted. "Mark Accimus and Phil Earley both wanted the same prizes. The two fought all the way home."

The group's farewell performance was given to a packed crowd in the Cave April Fools' night. "Young Blood" was a favorite encore. In closing their career, the 'Non-L's' expressed that they enjoyed every minute of their fame and fortune. They wished Mike Catron, a former co-hort, had been at their pinnacle of glory. Kris summed up the Non-L's appreciation of PLU support with:

"We'd like to thank all our local fans at PLU who supported our climb from the gutter—the depths of poverty—the extremities of despair—to the national limelight."

Governor Ray calls for teaching over research

by Karen Pierce

Washington Governor Dixie Lee Ray defended her controversial remarks about state higher education at a PLU conference March 29.

Speaking to the Association of Washington Business 1978 President's Conference, Ms. Ray said she had a total commitment to public education and to private education, from which her schooling came.

But she questioned the need for 58 per cent of the state's tax to go toward state higher education. Similar remarks made last January gained a reaction from college officials and the press which she said, "can only be described as heated."

"We need people trained to the utmost of ability in all fields—but at what cost? Is there some place where we can say to the taxpayer that his dollar is enough?"

She asserted that the state school system is "fragmented" with too many regents and administrators. She also questioned the need for two systems of vocational schooling.

Tenure she called "a sacred cow" and academic freedom "that ol' tattered banner", "The academic world is the only profession that enjoys such job security," she said. "But how well is it reviewed? And isn't it time we put teaching over research?"

"The public thinks its money should go to the education of its kids, not to research. Taxpayers are asking about that odious word—accountability."

Ms. Ray's remarks were received with applause and laughter. Afterward, she was whisked out the UC side door before further comments could be made.

Meyers aces one on hole # two

by Dwight Daniels

"It was the first time I've even hit that green in regulation," says Mike Meyer, a PLU junior, "but it went in!"

Meyer, who has been golfing the past seven years, was talking about the 3-iron shot he hit on hole number two of the university golf course. His shot was a "hole-in-one".

The lucky "ace" occurred two days before spring break on the most difficult par three on the university links. It is a 210-yard hole that drops off a rolling hill just as one approaches its green.

No one in the fivesome playing along with Meyer saw the ball go in, since the green cannot be seen from the trees.

"We thought the ball should be pretty near the green," says Meyer, "but we didn't see it anywhere."

Then Don Levin, one of the other golfers, noticed a ball in the cup, pulled the pin, and it was Meyer's ball.

"I couldn't believe it," says Meyer, who was a member of the PLU golf team last year. "It was really exciting!" In fact, Meyer blew the next hole on the course because he was too excited to concentrate, even though he ended the round at one under par.

Irv Marlow, the golf course manager, says the course averages only two or three "holes-in-one" a year. There have been only two others this year.

New members chosen for liberal arts excellence

by Mary Peterson

The Arete Society named 38 new members for their academic excellence in a liberal arts program.

Students were chosen by faculty members on the basis of GPA, breadth of liberal arts studies and specific course requirements in foreign language and mathematics.

The Arete Society was formed at PLU in 1970 as a by-product of faculty trying to establish a chapter of Phi Beta Kappa. PLU will apply for a chapter of Phi Beta Kappa at the next opportunity in 1979.

The 1977-78 members are:

June Albers, Kenneth Andersen, Carol Asberg, Cynthia Blanchard, Melissa Burke, Mark Dahle, Marilyn Fenn, Judith DeGroot, Wade Dieter, Kenneth Florian, Lynn Foerster, Simon Habot, Roy Hammerling, Wade Henrichs, Helen Hunsiker, David Keller, Carrie Kipp,

John Knox, Robert Kratzke, Donn Kruse, Paul Lecoo, Dennis McFall, Laurie McDougall, Robert McIntyre, Daniel Mattsen, Rachel Miller, Peter Morris, James Nieman, Jon Overvold, Darell Provencher, Dave Rieke, Kristine Ringo, Louise Sawyer, Robert Henry Sheffield, Stephen Shuman, Michelle Storms, Nancy Vessem, and Kenneth Von Cleve.

Pablo Cruise is coming to PLU May 12.

The tickets will go on sale April 21, and will cost PLU students $4. To the public tickets will cost $7. Tickets also cost $7 the day of the show. The concert in Olson Auditorium will begin at 8 p.m.

According to Wayne Anthony, the Entertainment Committee Chairman, PLU has been negotiating with Pablo Cruise's agent for the past month. Anthony said they had learned that the group wanted to come to the Northwest, so the committee made them an offer.

Pablo Cruise is a rock group from the bay area. With their third album, "A Place in the Sun", they struck gold. That album contained their first hit single "Whatcha Gonna Do". Their tour of the Northwest will coincide with the release of their new album.

Neighborhood needs surveyed

Residents of Parkland and Spanaway will be the first Pierce County area group to be interviewed when the Community Needs Assessment Survey gets underway April 3, according to Dr. Arturo Biblarz, project coordinator.

The survey project, expected to reach up to 20,000 households in suburban Pierce County over the next nine months, is intended to obtain a broadly-based sampling of attitudes regarding community needs and services, he indicated.

Interviewers, Biblarz said, will be wearing clearly visible identification tags. During the past several weeks they have undergone an intensive training program dealing with interviewing techniques that should make the brief individual sessions run as smoothly as possible.

Among the Parkland-Spanaway interview topics will be recreation, transportation, youth and senior citizen concerns, the military and the business community. These are among the topics that have surfaced unofficially from various area groups.

"We can already see that this is going to be an intensely interesting project," he said. "There has been a phenomenal amount of interest in the expected data shown by agencies, special groups and businesses."

One of the unique features of the project is that data will be reported in terms of needs of specific neighborhoods rather than the county as a whole.

The project was announced by the Pierce County commissioners Feb. 16. Funded by grants from the Pierce County Manpower office and Office of Community Development, it is believed to be the most comprehensive survey of its kind undertaken anywhere in the nation.

The grants, awarded to PLU, are being administered by the PLU Center for Human Organization in Changing Environments (CHOICE), the university's community action arm directed by Robert Menzel. Biblarz is a member of the PLU sociology faculty.

The project is providing full employment for some 70 persons for up to eight months under provisions of the Comprehensive Employment Training Act (CETA). Approximately 50 persons will be making the actual door-to-door contacts.

The broad dimensions of the undertaking are intended to meet two objectives, according to County Commissioner Joe Stortini. "One is the collection of a type and volume of data that had never been available to the county before. The other is to fulfill the CETA employment prerequisites of the Manpower grant," he said.

The Parkland-Spanaway portion of the survey will continue for several weeks although other areas will begin in the meantime.

Convention honors Karl

For the first time in its history, the Pi Kappa Delta northwest province named its annual convention in honor of one of its members.

This year's March 21-24 confab at the Empress Hotel in Victoria, B.C., was proclaimed the Theodore O.H. Karl Province Convention in honor of the retiring PLU drama and forensics professor who has been a national and provincial PKD leader for many years.

The former president of the national forensics honorary, Karl is currently serving the first year of his second four-year term as national secretary.

THE END OF THE TRACKS

I am an old train left here to rest at the end of the tracks. My doors are rusting, my timbers rotting and my paint wears thin. The weeds grow tall from my floorboards as I watch newspapers being chased down the line by gusts of wind. I have been labeled... "No longer of service-able quality: Retired." Seems a funny way to tell an old train he's getting old. Spend your life carrying people and freight across this great land on pathways of steel; harboring hobos that hide from the yard bosses in hopes that the next junction might hold in store something more than the last. Then one day your life has passed you by. Newer, faster, sleeker trains that glisten as they speed off to their destinations. We moved a country in my day. It was a young land then, bustling with expansion. People with futures to be found and riches to be sought. Things haven't changed much since then, except this time around, this old train will have to be satisfied just to sit and watch and rest...alone at the end of the tracks.

On the road: Bear country

Last year Dan Miller began a six month journey, hitchhiking and riding around the countryside. He traveled first with Erik Flowberg, then Mark Brandt. This is the first in a series of excerpts from his journal.

June 1978

I OFTEN WONDER why it is I want so badly to take this trip.

In American Lit. class this semester the theme was man's quest, his search for something, some meaning, some purpose or direction, something more than what he's got now and isn't satisfied with. Some happiness—

I don't feel I am misdirected or unhappy or really searching for "something", but that is an experience totally different from anything in my past. It is this "unknown" that drives me, this "newness" that causes dreams, this "adventure" that must be fulfilled.

I don't consider myself necessarily a personalist but I certainly feel that this experience will broaden me as a person, help me to grow, perhaps sooner, and in ways that I might otherwise not grow. It is like a child's fear of the unknown, the dark. It is terrifying yet at the same time still intriguing.

This is the way I feel about the trip. Look forward to the hard times and the things the Lord will teach me through them.

I WANT TO know what it is like to be dirty with nowhere to bathe, to have hunger in my stomach with nothing to eat. I don't want this to be a joy ride. Everything in our lives is taken for granted. If pain is not near us we think little of pain. If hunger is not near us we think little of hunger.

I have been very fortunate. Good home, family, etc. Pacific Lutheran was a great experience. But college is the most secure place there is. Many find it hard to break away. . .

Growth is in proportion to your willingness to break away. . . away from easiness, what's always comfortable—the secure syndrome—we must be more secure in ourselves and above all else, secure in God. . .

When Mom died I often said, "You never realize how much you love someone, until you lose them."

I'll never know what it is to go across the country—good times and bad—friendly people—not so friendly people, in company and in loneliness, good weather and bad—until I do it. . . and so I go, in eagerness and skepticism, but in trust.

QUE SERA' SERA.

Wednesday June 8

Still about 25 miles from where our hike starts—if it does. We're supposed to be at a certain campsite tonight. Not too optimistic about getting there. . .

ERIK IS upset about the assigned campsites—"an infringement on our freedom"—but it's because of the bears.

I'm too dumb to make any logical, opinionated gripe. Some of my best friends can be bears. . .

Check out this garb from a brochure they gave us. This breaks me up. . . "A grizzly will often rise on its hind legs to investigate. If he does, it may be effective to speak softly, as steady, soft human monotones often appear effective in reassuring the bear that no harm is meant to it. At the same time, however, look for a tree to climb."

Ha. Ha. Ha. etc. . . just like that. "However, look for a tree to climb."

Or this quick quip. "If you can't reach a tree and the bear continues to advance, your best bet may be to play dead, lying on your stomach or on your side with your legs drawn up to your chest, and clasping your hands over the back of your neck" . . .

Other suggestions are: be extroverted. Go up to it, give it a big, warm bear hug. And say, "Remember me, I'm from Wyoming? I saw you down there. Oh? That wasn't you? You all look alike? I see" . . . Then hop a freight out-a-there. . .

WELL, WE MADE it. The whole way. A truck stopped and drove us to Lewis Lake. It was 5:00 p.m. and the hike to our first assigned campsite was 9 1/2 miles.

We took off. We walked and walked. That is the longest 9 1/2 miles I have ever seen, let alone hiked. Erik said it was one of the toughest hikes he's done as far as just putting your head down and going. Wanted to be sure and get there before it got dark.

We figured we made a little over three miles an hour. A lot of credit goes to the mosquitoes (the heaviest, bitingest bunch around), who tormented us the whole way.

After the poor hitch hiking and the 9 1/2 mile truck we had to set up the tent, cook dinner, take all our food out of our bags, put it into stuff bags and hang it between two trees.

We would have taken a picture of this but we couldn't hold the camera—you see Erik was busy tying the rope and I was busy complaining that he gained 20 pounds this year, as he stood on my shoulders.

Had nice fire going. Sticky icky in the sleeping bag. Haven't taken shower or real bath since Sunday. . .

Ooh gross! Must teach my legs to be less forward, as everytime one crosses over on top of the other, it's Elmer's glue time and stuck that way till morning. It can be pretty tough putting your pants on with your legs stuck together. . .

As one hitch hiker said to the other about thumbing down traffic, "It's always going the other way."

Thursday June 9

FIRST BATH today—cold! OooWeee! Right in the lake and creek. Washed my hair and can now even move my fingers through it. Upset many little bug families as they were flooded out of their homes when I dunked my head.

Erik mended his pack this morning—granola breakfast by fire. . . now going to have quiet time—reading Romans.

Weather was really miserable on the hike. Usually it rained if we had our rain gear off and was dry if we had rain gear on. . . boots are sopping wet as the trail was virtually unhikeable, because it was so muddy.

DID YOU SEE it Dan. Dan did you see it? Ya. I see it Erik, I see it. Then why'd you step in it? . . .

I have spent some time on the hikes devoting my thoughts and energies to methods of identifying animal feces.

Now—there are basically three types of elk dung. (1) Your basic small round ones referred to by your highness as milk duds or bon bons. (2) Larger than milk duds and more of an oval shape like chocolate Easter eggs that come in fancy colored tin foil. (3) These are longer and thinner and darker brown-black, these resemble black licorice Ike 'n Mike's.

Moose excrement come in much larger packages. They resemble the scoops of dressing we got every Sunday with turkey roast or ham. . .

The Earth is a color wheel of pine needles burnt oranges, red-browns, lime yellows—scaly pine cone castles like dragon tails wild strawberry plants with white blossoms trees fallen by wind or storm or the axe of man. There is no pavement here. Only trails of dirt and paths through wild grass. Old roots form steps and mossy stones or stumps serve as places to rest. The elk and moose are tamer than many people and the geese more graceful than any jet. It is peaceful.

Friday June 10

Was only supposed to be a four mile hike but we missed our markers and went about three or four miles out of our way. Pretty relaxing hike though, because we took our time. Mosquitoes and weather have been bad. Lucky we have mosquito spray—my arms are all bitten up as it is.

The trout are in abundance in these streams here. Erik caught a nice trout, about 15 inches—with a rock. We rigged up a stove which amounted to two sharpened sticks through its body, and we each took turn holding the sticks. . . Can't remember last time, if ever, that I saw only one person the whole day. . .

Climbed tree tonight to secure food. Still no sign of bear. However Erik and I are taking every precaution. Every three hours we have training sessions where one of us plays the bear, growls and basically makes a total fool of himself while the other talks in a monotone, looks for climbable trees, plays dead, and basically makes a total fool of himself. Still no sign of Hollywood agents.

Saturday June 11

Today was our first day of hiking with no rain. Also second complete day without seeing anyone else. . . Debating about sleeping out tonight. Presently clear. But kind of cold. . .

Forgot to mention our bells. It is suggested that hikers have bells tied to their packs to ward off the bears. So we got Indian dancing bells and strapped them to our boots. Every other step it's jingle-ling-a-ling. . .

THINKING OF FAMILY and friends. . . been thinking a lot about Mom out here.

Remember her asking me how my Spanish was coming one weekend when I went home, though she was but a month from dying, living in bed.

Man, the last thing I wanted to talk about was Spanish class. I swear I never went to class that semester.

Feel lucky I got 19 good years with her. Regret Chris wasn't older but trust the main man had better things in mind for Mom. Always have been content with what happened because it was good for Mom, though sometimes I miss her so much.

I think people couldn't understand if I said, Today was a bad day. I was missing Mom. They wouldn't figure out how you could get down three years later. But time means little when you love someone. . . goodnight Mom. I'm doin' fine.

Editorial

T

The title "Morning Mist" used on our April Fool's edition was originally suggested by Dr. Leif Johannessen, a subscriber in Massachusetts. We were glad we got the chance to use it this year.

And a thank you that has been long overdue goes to Mark Anderson, who designed this year's Mooring Mast logo.

We are now planning for the last five issues of the Mast.

If you have any suggestions of stories we should cover before the year is over, or if you have a poem, story, drawing or photo you would like us to consider, please let us know soon.

In addition, Allison Arthur, next year's editor, is in the process of making staff appointments. Many will be announced today, but it is never too late to apply—even for work this year. Write Allison c/o the Mooring Mast or call her at 537-4342.

One of the biggest editorial frustrations of the year has been the Cave. At the start of the year it was too early to tell how good it would be. Towards the middle of the year, for a variety of reasons, an editorial on the Cave was never printed. I wrote four—all were cut because of space limitations. And when we had space I had no time to write.

But that has not been the problem lately. The Cave has been so consistently good I have been paralyzed by an inability to write anything more than cliches. The music has been outstanding. From PLU students like Scott Martin to Wednesday's fine jazz night, broadcast live on KPLU-FM, the Cave's diverse offerings have been well selected. And when the music is off key—as it sometimes is—the kitchen can make any hungry person smile. Good submarine sandwiches, yogurt, fresh fruit and bagels are all available for a reasonable price.

In short, the only non-budgetary problem with the Cave lately has been that it has been "discovered"—and the lines are a little longer now that it is getting the recognition it deserves. Bill Bennett, Laurie Swan and Chris Teal have been good managers.

To the editor:

I address this letter in the form of a request in reference to the announcement of the 1978 Lucia Groom, Kris Morris, in the April 1, 1978 issue of Morning Mist.

Seemingly it has been my misfortune that introductions were not made sooner, however with eagerness, I ask that you might facilitate a date with the aforementioned for our mutual satisfaction.

As stated in the article, Kris Morris was chosen by the students to be Lucia Groom "for his chastity and purity."

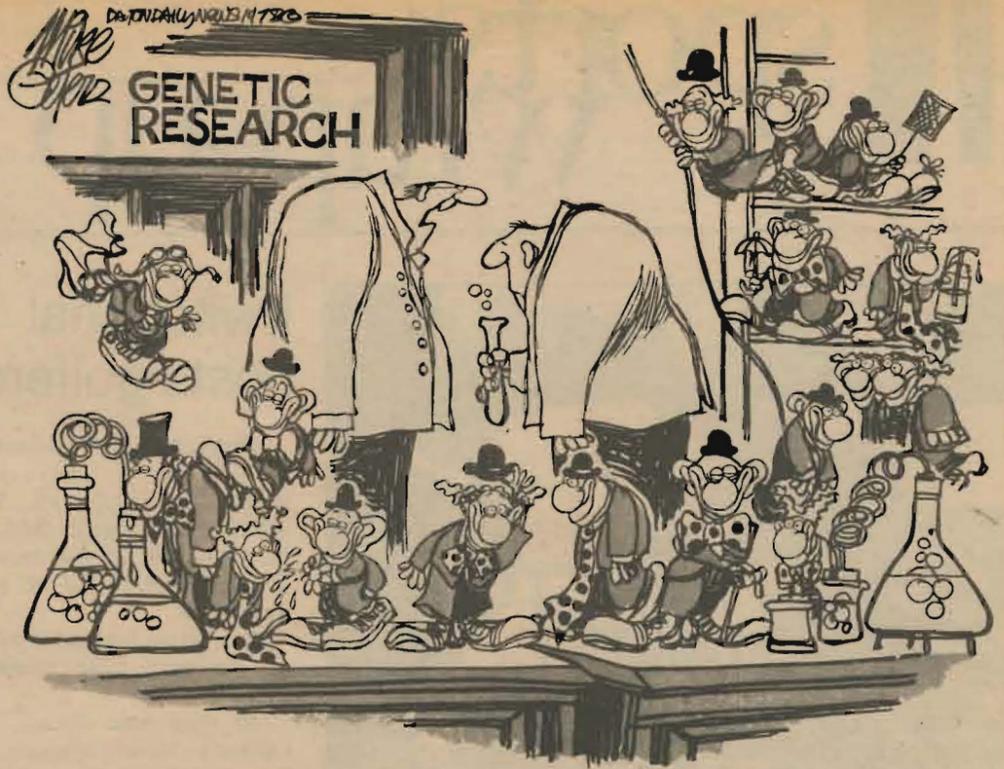

Reflecting back upon my experience as 1976 Lucia Bride, it is obvious that the previous was not criterion for my selection, since neither chastity nor purity candles on my crown would stand upright, even with the assistance of tape, bubble gum, and a little spit. Consequently, it is of immediate necessity that I contact Groom Morris that he might instruct me in the hows (and whys) of leading a virgin life.

Time is fleeting and I'm running out of tape; my potential celibate future lies in your safekeeping. It is my hope that through our meeting, Groom Morris might light my crown with new insights concerning the virtuous life.

With earnest desire,

Laurel Frosig

CLONES, YOU IDIOT... I SAID CLONES.

Mike Gulezian, that "pyrotechnician" on guitar from Tucson, played in the Cave again last Sunday. His last appearance here was in the fall; Cave Entertainment Manager Teal wanted him back so bad he arranged a complete northwest tour for him. And now, touched with post-concert euphoria, I must agree that he was worth the trouble. Mike Gulezian is more than a good musician.

Gulezian's mainstay talent lies in the strange and wonderful sounds he creates with six or 12 steel strings. Aided by capo and bottle-neck slide, he can play melodies as gentle as Jackson Browne's or as cosmically vibrant as Pink Floyd's.

He takes technique and exploits it. He is a special-effects man on guitar, using unusual tuning, slides, pulls and quick-pickin' to produce the sounds he wants. His whole body plays—watch him sway to the beat, his feet pumping, head bobbing and eyes rolling upward like he is willing the high notes to the ceiling.

His left hand hammers, stretches the strings, while his fingers run on pickin'. Watching, you think of Leo Kottke, Jorma Kaukonen of Hot Tuna fame, and that blind kid dueling banjo in "Deliverance". Gulezian is quick, with the sure touch of expression. See how his hair tosses, how his eyes close and his teeth flash in a Cheshire grin. When the notes come hammering out of the guitar's belly like that, you can see inside he is saying "yeah!"

Gulezian's performance of other artist's material is skillful and tasty. Witness his version of Kottke's "Vaseline Machine-gun", done almost as well as Kottke himself does it.

But it is his own songs that are the real crowd-pleasers. Because though his playing can be dazzling, his true nature belongs next to a campfire—on the set of "Saturday Night Live". No one in the Cave Sunday will forget singing along with a leer to "Girl Scout Cookies":

"Come here, little girl, I want your cookies... I'd like to sink my teeth into your thin mints... I hope this year you won't charge fifty cents."

Or forget the story behind "The Monopoly Song", a dubious love song first sung on the edge of a Ramada Inn water-bed to a girl "better than anything Santa Claus brings."

There was a low point. Perhaps it was the strain of the road or the lack of appropriate stage beverage. Whatever the reason, Gulezian's voice sounded like a victim of his own campfire—burned out. Is it another parallel to Kottke? Or does he just need voice lessons?

The exception was on "Close your Eyes", where the addition of Chris Teal and Scott Martin made beautiful three-part harmony. But the same combination on "Oh, Suzannah" sounded like cock crowing at dawn.

Cave Manager Bill Bennett

called the crowd the rowdiest of the year. But whether Gulezian was as pleased with the audience as they were with him is hard to say. Though Gulezian was funny, many times his humor was at the expense of the audience. Often he subtly mocked the crowd, like a shaggy-haired Groucho Marx. At the concert's enthusiastic ending, he cracked "what the hell is this—a sitting ovation?"

Perhaps he was uncertain whether the people came for him or for the hot dogs. Or maybe he was unnerved by the repeated delayed reaction to his jokes. Was it the uncanny laugh in the front row that shook him? Or the odd couple that did a dervish dance to a song Gulezian called undanceable?

Hopefully he will not take it personally. For Gulezian is a very talented musician, and a crazy person to boot. Am I allowed to hope that he does not hit the big time too quickly? For I'd like to see him back at the Cave.

Who else can do a spaced-out imitation of Pink Floyd—single-guitar-handed?

sports wrap-up

Todd Spencer practices for the Saturday double-header against Pacific. Games will be played here at one and three. Last weekend the Lutes beat Whitworth twice and lost once.

Invitational hosts golfers

Pacific Lutheran will host the Northwest University Invitational April 12, then entertain the classic field the following day in the traveling show's fourth round of a six stop circuit.

Tee action both days will be on Tacoma's Lake Spanaway course.

In their links opener, Roy Carlson's squad slipped past Puget Sound 103-100. Sophomore Jeff Peck was medalist with a one-over par 73. Freshman Mike McEntire aced the par three 175 yard third hole.

The Lutes were situated in fourth place after the first round of the Small-College Classic. Peck was third in individual play with a 76. At the March 28 McNary (Ore.) Invitational, PLU placed sixth in a field of twelve.

Crew performance slips at Daffodil Regatta

Lute Racers were winless at the Daffodil Regatta in Tacoma and the Green Lake Women's Regatta in Seattle. Because of the race lineup, the Lutes didn't enter fours in the men's Daffodil test.

The Lady Lutes' best effort was in the varsity eight, finishing third, just three seconds behind the winning Lake Washington Rowing Club shell.

During a spring vacation California trip, PLU women won every race but one at Klamath Falls. The men swept in three clashes at St. Mary's. In exhibition against the Oakland Strokes, PLU was first and second in men's fours, second in a field of four eights.

Earlier, PLU's women's eight was victorious at the University of British Columbia Invitational. The Lutes were fifth among 21 entries in combined men's and women's scoring.

Girls' softball clinic hosted

PLU, in cooperation with Pierce County Parks and Recreation, will host a girls' softball clinic April 15 in Olson Auditorium.

Former professional fastpitch hurler Cathy Benedetto, presently head women's basketball coach at Seattle University, will be the feature clinician.

The clinic is open to coaches as well as players. Topics include practice organization and drills, conditioning, pitching, infield and outfield skills, batting and sliding techniques, sports motivation, and prevention and treatment of athletic injuries.

Lutes second at Ellensburg

Women tracksters will travel to Salem on Saturday for the Oregon-California Invitational, hosted by Willamette University.

The Lady Lutes finished second at the six school Central Washington Invitational Saturday in Ellensburg.

Senior Marcy Sakrison placed second in the 400 meter dash. Junior Teddy Breeze bettered the NCWSA qualifying standard with a 12.5 in the 100 meter chase, finishing second.

Sophomore Sandy Walker was PLU's lone winner, capturing the 400 meter hurdles in 1:13:8. Junior 'th Coughlin was runnerup in the '000 meter run.

Earlier, at the Alzman Relays, Breeze won a long jump in 17-4½ and was strong in the relays, as was Sakrison.

Dr. Olson joins NAIA board

Dr. Dave Olson, athletic director, has been elected to a four-year term on the executive committee of the National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics.

The 11-member executive committee is the governing body of the NAIA, which represents 513 four-year degree-granting institutions nationwide.

Olson, 43, AD and director of the School of Physical Education for the past 10 years at PLU, has been chairman of NAIA District 1 since 1974. He will resign from that post effective May 1 to assume his

Track competition tough in Portland

Pacific Lutheran will get its first good look at track and field competition in the Northwest Conference when it travels to Lewis & Clark this Saturday.

Last Saturday at the Western Washington Invitational in Bellingham the Lute bests were a third in the 440 relay, Prentis Johnson's 23.4 third place clocking in the 220, and Steve Kingma's 6-2 high jump, also a third place ribbon.

District one honors Anderson

Ed Anderson was named NAIA district coach of the year. In his third year as PLU cage boss, Anderson directed the Lutes to a 19-7 season, the best school ledger in twelve years.

Kevin Petersen has been selected for NAIA 1978 All-America basketball recognition.

The Tacoma Art Museum presents artist-educators from Tacoma's four most outstanding universities/colleges: PLU, TCC, FSCC and UPS. The exhibition continues through April 30 on the first floor gallery. A university/college student exhibition is displayed on the second floor gallery.

Academy Award winner Robert DeNiro's performance of a New York City cabbie is featured in this week's Lakewood Theatre Midniter Movie. "Taxi Driver" followed by the 1938 short starring Crazy Kay, "Auto Clinic" begins at 12:00 midnight and costs $1. Tune to FM-92.5 for details.

It's a bird, it's a plane, it's a comic book convention! The Seattle Center presents a convention for those who like to read bubbles, this Sunday from 9:30 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. Open to the public. $1 Admission. Call (Seattle) 822-5709 or 329-2261 for more information.

The Pacific Science Center and the Northwest Computer Society will co-sponsor a Personal Computer Fair in the Eames Theater, tomorrow and Sunday. Hours are 10:00 a.m. to 7:00 p.m. Regular Science Center admission applies.

Piano/Guitar artist Steve Seskin will perform in concert this Tuesday at 9:30 p.m. in the Cave. The San Francisco Bay Guardian says, "live performances are Seskin's strong point." He is highly recommended by students who attended his concert here last year.

The 1978 Daffodil Festival Grand Floral Street Parade will commence at 10 a.m. sharp Saturday at 7th and Pacific in downtown Tacoma for a line of march which will take it to 24th and Pacific. This annual Puyallup Valley event never ceases to be more magnificent each year.

The Cave presents "Funny Lady" on Monday at 9:30 p.m. Herbert Ross's sequel to "Funny Girl" continues the life of Fanny Brice (Barbra Streisand) and focuses on her relationship with Billy Ross (James Caan), the flashy Broadway impresario.
