Town meetings spark 2010 vision

The development of a new long-range plan for the university began last year with a series of town meetings in 24 locations—from Hong Kong and Helsinki to Portland and Phoenix—with 1,400 alumni, parents and friends of the university participating.

From the written record of the town meetings and follow-up material submitted by participants, the major themes held to be central to the future of PLU included: the centrality and importance of the liberal arts, the university's Christian/Lutheran heritage, the future importance of technology, the importance and impact of international study, and more one-on-one faculty-student interaction.

In addition, constituents encouraged the university to maintain and strengthen its commitment to inclusiveness, build more programming to connect with graduates and continue its commitment to co-curricular activities.

Based in part on these recommendations, four on-campus planning groups have been charged with preparing background papers, leading discussions and holding forums. These commissions will report to the campus community in the spring and fall of 2001. The process will be completed in the spring of 2002 with the publication of the new long-range plan, PLU 2010: The Next Level of Distinction.

Reflecting on the long-range planning process, President Loren J. Anderson said, "There are quite literally thousands of people who care about the university, who share our dreams for the future and are cheering us on our way. We must continue to build a university fully engaged in the future; a university that embraces technology, emphasizes international study, celebrates inclusiveness, demands excellence, and through it all, calls students to lives of faithful service."

Norwegian leader speaks of peace, democracy

Thorvald Stoltenberg, former foreign minister of Norway and current president of the Norwegian Red Cross, met with students, faculty, staff, members of the Scandinavian Cultural Center and the public before his talk. They were eager to shake hands and take photographs with the man who has spent his life working for world peace.

While there are more democracies in the world than ever before, Stoltenberg said the change has resulted in more crime, mob activity and drug trafficking in some areas. In countries with new free markets, people are losing their jobs.

"It makes people wonder if the choice is between democracy and order, we choose order," he said.

According to Stoltenberg, there is a way to maintain both democracy and peace, and world organizations such as the United Nations and NATO are an important part of that. The week of his visit to PLU, Norway won a hard-fought battle for a seat on the UN Security Council.

Stoltenberg is best known for his role as United Nations peace negotiator in the former Yugoslavia from 1993-1996. He also served in the UN as high commissioner for refugees, and ended his political and diplomatic career as Norway's ambassador to Denmark.

The university established the Harstad lecture in memory of PLU's founder and first president, Bjug Harstad. His family created an endowment to fund the lecture series and help carry out Harstad's wish that Scandinavian Americans not lose touch with their ancestral culture and traditions.

PLU Scandinavian Collection awarded grant

University archivist Kerstin Ringdahl '82 and the Scandinavian Immigrant Experience Collection have been awarded a $49,116 grant. The grant, given by the Washington State Library, is part of the Digital Images Initiative 2000 grant cycle, sponsored by the Federal Institute of Museum and Library Services.

The project is supported by the Manuscripts, Special Collections, University Archives Division of the University of Washington Libraries, and will give online access to Scandinavian manuscripts, oral histories and organizational records at both universities through www.plu.edu/~archives/sie/sieindex.html. Work on the project began Oct. 1, 2000 and will be completed Aug. 31, 2001.

PLU Places High...Again

Pacific Lutheran University is number nine on the list of Top Western Universities in the 2001 edition of the U.S. News and World Report guidebook, "America's Best Colleges."

All rankings and articles from the book are available from U.S. News Online at www.usnews.com. The rankings also appeared in the Sept. 11 issue of U.S. News.

The rankings were based on academic reputation, retention, graduation rate, faculty resources (including class size), student selectivity, financial resources, alumni giving rate, and other similar factors.

PLU tied for the ninth spot with St. Mary's College of California and Whitworth College (Wash.). PLU remains the only Northwest university to be listed in all of the U.S. News best college surveys since they began in 1983.

The U.S. News ranking is only one indicator that students and families should use in choosing a college, according to Laura Polcyn '75, '74, vice president for Admissions & Enrollment Services at PLU.

"We hope that prospective students will use the rankings as a motivation to get out and visit the colleges they are considering," Polcyn said. "There is nothing better than a campus visit to get a firsthand impression of the welcoming, supportive and challenging climate that exists at PLU. We welcome students to experience it for themselves before they make a college choice."

Governor honors PLU Promise Scholars

Recalling his own struggles to pay for college, Gov. Gary Locke honored more than 150 outstanding PLU freshmen and sophomores who earned Promise Scholarships.

The scholarships are available to high-achieving students from low- and middle-income families. Locke believes the scholarships are important because they allow talented, hard-working students from working families to get an education at the school of their choice—including a private university.

Gov. Locke said he understood why so many scholars would choose PLU.

"It's a great institution and a great center of learning," he said.

At the October reception, he congratulated the students on their accomplishments and thanked their parents and teachers for helping them on their way.

Sophomore Kristy Van Nostran '03 thanked Locke on behalf of students earning scholarships, and the Rev. Ronald Kempe, whose daughter Katherine '03 attends PLU, discussed how it helps parents send their children to school.

"We are pleased and honored that so many of the state's top scholars chose to attend Pacific Lutheran University," PLU President Loren Anderson said.

PUBLISHED CORNER

CARLTON BENSON, assistant professor of history, is the author of a chapter titled "Consumers Are Also Soldiers: Subversive Songs from Nanjing Road During the New Life Movement" in the book "Inventing Nanjing Road: Commercial Culture in Shanghai, 1900-1945," edited by Sherman Cochran (Cornell University East Asia Series, 1999). The chapter argues that retailers in 1930s Shanghai incorporated the militant, anti-capitalist rhetoric of Chiang Kai-shek's New Life Movement into their advertising campaigns by recasting consumers as soldiers who served the nation by shopping. In effect, their efforts to build a consumer society not only inspired, but also swamped, a state-sponsored political campaign.

MEGAN BENTON, associate professor of English and director of the publishing and printing arts program, is the author of "Beauty and the Book" (Yale University Press, 2000), a cultural history of the post-World War I publishing boom in fine editions. Buyers of these deluxe editions were often critics of modern mass culture, satisfying their desire for social distinction and cultural superiority—in addition to their aesthetic ideals—by purchasing these books. Benton explains, however, that fine bookmaking embodied some troubling ambiguities as bookmakers were unwilling to compromise with machinery, popular taste or the bottom line.

PATRICIA O'CONNELL KILLEN, professor of religion, is a co-author of "The Catholic Experience of Small Christian Communities" (Paulist Press, 2000). The book is the largest empirical study of small faith communities in the Roman Catholic Church ever undertaken. Killen and her co-authors explain the attraction of these groups to people of various ages, and report on the attitudes and practices of members on a range of religious and social issues. The authors also suggest ways that small faith communities function as a venue for the formation of Catholic life and practice that bridges mid-20th-century ethnic communities to the post-modern world of the 21st century. Killen is also the author of a chapter titled "The Irish in Washington State" in "The Encyclopedia of the Irish in America" (University of Notre Dame Press, 2000). This article surveys the history of the Irish in what is today's Washington State, and shows how the experience of the Irish here cannot be explained using the dominant interpretive categories of Irish-American history—neighborhood, parish, and union.

ANDREW MILTON, visiting assistant professor of political science, is the author of "The Rational Politician: Exploiting the Media in New Democracies" (Ashgate Publishing, 2000). Milton examines the role and status of the news media during the transition to democracy in post-communist East Central Europe. He finds that efforts to free the media from the ties that bound them (to the state) were often thwarted by political actors seeking to exploit the media for their own ends.

Education students integrate technology into the classroom without losing the human touch

BY DREW BROWN, EDITOR

Kyle Shanton, a faculty member in the PLU School of Education, rolls a gargantuan red Radio Flyer wagon behind him, with all usual supplies for an elementary school classroom: pencils, pens, crayons, books, paper, ruler, glue, CD-ROM disks, an Apple iBook laptop with wireless connectivity to the Internet. Educators have often worried that technology will depersonalize the essence of teaching, which is human interaction.

Education, meet Matthew Barritt and his colleagues. Barritt is one of many in the PLU School of Education who have helped develop the department's continuing goal of technology integration. Students in PLU's School of Education are developing as skilled users of technology in large measure because of alumnus Diana Pederson '83. Pederson gave a generous gift to the School of Education that funded much of the equipment that puts students ahead of the curve. It also allowed for the creation of the Pederson/Stein Technology Enhanced Classroom—in honor of her grandfather, Arne Pederson, and Lynn Stein, faculty emeriti in the School of Education.

The learning starts where, on this day, Matthew Barritt is teaching a software program called Inspiration. An unusual compatibility snafu won't allow Barritt to project his computer's image up on the screen. The solution? Hook up the digital camera, point it at the computer monitor, and project that. Barritt doesn't miss a beat. What started as a software demo has become a lesson learned.

"Don't kick yourself when things don't go right," Barritt says to his students, "this can be hard."

Inspiration allows students to "idea map"—the old fashioned concept of starting from one idea, and branching off. Idea mapping takes on a different dimension in computers: ideas can be changed, moved, and further text can be written off screen. Instead of the software being the lesson, it becomes a tool for students to brainstorm educational concepts. They then can take Inspiration into their own classrooms.

Students move into small groups in different rooms—each group recorder carrying an iBook. While the mapping is done, students jump out of their seats over to the monitor, pointing at the screen, interacting with each other—learning the software while molding ideas. At times, the iBook is the center of attention, but mostly, the collaboration is what takes center stage.

Barb Pixton '01 was initially reluctant when it came to technology, but now sees its potential. "Technology opens up so many doors," she said. "Students who were hesitant to share opened up with e-mail."

Jenn Smith '01 and Jenn Griffin '01, students in Barritt's Media & Technology (K-8) class, took on the responsibility of facilitating technological communication between Spanaway Jr. High students and teachers. "Discussion on computers toned down the formality," said Smith. "Students felt more comfortable in sharing their opinions and creating ideas."

The School of Education emphasizes analysis of the individual situation—finding out what resources their school has, and using those resources to improve learning.

"A pen and pencil are 'technology,'" Smith added. "Like any tool, it's important to know how to use it to benefit your students."

For PLU's education students, their most valuable individual tool may be what they call "electronic portfolios." They have been able to use their advanced technological knowledge to develop extensive teaching portfolios that are put on CD-ROMs and posted to the Internet.

Electronic portfolios are built to reflect teacher competency standards and are aligned with the department's core values of competence, care, leadership and service. Lessons they have learned from working with others, challenges they have had, personal interests, philosophies they have developed and changed, projects they have completed and lessons they have taught. This only scratches the surface of what students have put on their electronic portfolios. Both CD-ROM's and the Internet allow enough memory to include large video clips—most have added personal teaching footage to show evidence in fulfilling the core values and competency standards.

"ELECTRONIC PORTFOLIOS TELL A STORY OF WHO STUDENTS ARE, WELL BEYOND THEIR RÉSUMÉS," SAID BARRITT. EACH IS A WORK IN PROGRESS—FROM LESSONS TAUGHT TO LESSONS LEARNED, FROM COLLABORATION TO INDIVIDUAL ACHIEVEMENT.

Matthew Barritt discusses educational concepts in a small group workshop.

"Electronic portfolios tell a story of who students are," said Barritt, "well beyond their résumés." Each is a work in progress—from lessons taught to lessons learned, from collaboration to individual achievement. Electronic portfolios show not just a record of accomplishments, but a record of learning and personal growth.

In the School of Education, the key is not the technology. The key is using the benefits of technology to help move forward the very human art of teaching—and the PLU School of Education is leading the way.

Transplant volunteers show true PLU bond

BY KATHERINE HEDLAND '88

Last spring, Nicole Cunningham '00 needed a machine to breathe for her. By this fall, she was entertaining three job offers and moving into her own apartment.

Cunningham owes her remarkable recovery to two fellow Lutes, her best friend and cousin. The pair donated parts of their own lungs to replace Cunningham's, which were ravaged by cystic fibrosis.

"I thought it was going to be quite a lot longer before I started feeling so well," Cunningham said.

Cunningham's lifelong condition worsened as she got older. Realizing that her disease was life threatening, and chances for a donor were slim, Cunningham sent a letter to family and friends saying she would pursue a lung transplant.

One volunteer was her cousin, Adele Anderson '03. As she was getting her blood tested, Anderson said she was struck by a feeling that she was the right person to help.

"I felt that God's hand was on my shoulder," Anderson said.

Mary Beth Leeper '00, Cunningham's best friend since eighth grade and college roommate, also volunteered, but another cousin was thought to be a better match. When Cunningham developed a lung infection that nearly killed her in April, the transplant was moved up. Cunningham's other cousin was ruled out as a donor, and Leeper flew to Los Angeles at the last minute for the surgery.

"It was the easiest decision I've ever made in my life," Leeper said. "When I got that call from Nicole's dad, I knew that's where I needed to be."

The transplant—which took a lobe from each of the donors to replace each of Cunningham's lungs—was done at the hospital at UCLA. Recovery was difficult for Leeper and Anderson, who will always have about 5-10 percent less lung capacity, but both are getting stronger every day.

"The transplant itself is a miracle," Leeper said.

Before, Cunningham required painful 20-minute treatments four times a day, was on oxygen at night, and had a feeding tube because she was usually too sick to eat. She was down to 80 pounds. Since the operations, she's put 20 pounds back on her 5-foot, 1-inch frame.

"I just take a handful of pills in the morning and a handful at night, and it's so much less than I was doing before."

Cunningham said PLU provided needed support during her illness. She did homework at the hospital and kept up as much as she could. When she was hospitalized weeks before graduation, faculty members eased her mind.

"My professors were so wonderful," she said. "They just wanted me to not worry, but I was so stressed out about it." Cunningham graduated in May, and walked during August ceremonies.

She says there's no way to properly Anderson and Leeper for what they've done. She has tried, in person and through letters.

"There's no words to describe what they've given me," she said. "We just have this special relationship."

Seeing Cunningham's newfound strength is all the thanks they need.

"She's doing awesome," Anderson said. "She was on her deathbed. Now you'd never know anything happened."

Cunningham, who chose to take a job as a customer service representative for the mental health department of the Pacificare office in Hillsboro, Ore., has become a resource for other patients. She's already talked to two women considering the same kind of transplants, and wants them to know how much it can change their lives.

"I cannot believe that breathing can be so easy," she said. "I am so blessed by the whole experience."

Susan Nixon is following in her daughter's footsteps. After seeing how much her daughter, Tammy, enjoyed her nursing studies, Susan chose to return to school. Susan, who has worked as a licensed practical nurse at a family clinic in Eatonville for 17 years, decided it was time to move up to become a registered nurse.

"Tammy was able to achieve her goals and her dreams, and I regretted not having done that," Susan said. "She was my inspiration."

Just like Tammy, she completed her associate's degree at Pierce College, then moved on to PLU's School of Nursing, where her daughter was enrolled.

Tammy, 22, graduates in December. Her mom will finish up in August.

"She won't wait a year to graduate with me," Susan joked.

It's been almost 20 years since the School of Nursing has had a mother and daughter in the program at the same time, according to Shirley Aiken, a 26-year member of the nursing faculty.

"They will both make wonderful RNs," Aiken said.

Susan, 43, said her husband, Brian, and her two younger daughters supported her decision.

"I love having my mom here," Tammy said. "I'm really proud of her."

Her mother is equally proud. The two say they are close and share a good-natured sense of humor. They laugh at how Tammy at first didn't want students at Pierce to know her mother was also taking classes, and how Susan was embarrassed the first time she heard, "Hi Mom!" in the hallway.

Because Tammy was a year ahead, the two never had a class together. They do talk about professors, classes, and what they have learned.

Both say they chose nursing because they enjoy working with patients, and reaching out to others. After completing a preceptorship (a nursing internship) in pediatrics at Mary Bridge Children's Hospital (in Tacoma) this fall, Tammy hopes to work with children. Susan hopes to emphasize community health care when she chooses a specialty. Both look forward to comparing the details of their new careers—as they have with their education.

"It's been fun," Susan said. "It's something we've shared, and something we can always look back on."

"TAMMY WAS ABLE TO ACHIEVE HER GOALS AND HER DREAMS, AND I REGRETTED NOT HAVING DONE THAT. SHE WAS MY INSPIRATION."

Fulbright Scholars spark PLU's global perspective

BY KATHERINE HEDLAND '88

PLU's Fulbright Scholars have studied international relations in Germany, literature in Norway and environmental studies in India. But many say the most important lessons weren't learned in the classroom—as unique cultures and challenges opened the doors to self-discovery.

"My year over there was both the best time of my life and the most difficult," said Jeremy Mangan '98, who studied at the Academy of Fine Arts in Munich. "When you're on your own, you start to see things in a different way."

In recognition of the 25th anniversary of PLU's involvement in the Fulbright program, many of the 51 PLU graduates who have been awarded the prestigious scholarship returned for a reunion during Homecoming weekend. Professor emeritus Rodney Swenson, the heart and soul of the PLU program, presented the Heritage Lecture, and eight alums participated in a panel discussion afterwards. Many came to pay tribute to Swenson, who retired in the spring after teaching German since 1968. He continues to work with Fulbright applicants.

"The thrust of the program is an investment in peace, and one of the best ways to do that is to have young people living and working in other cultures," Swenson said. "This has become my crusade."

After his lecture about the importance of language and broadening horizons, panelists took to the podium. One after another, alums told tales of their years abroad and thanked Swenson for encouraging them to pursue the Fulbright, the U.S. government's premier scholarship program. The Fulbright was created after World War II, with the goal of fostering mutual understanding among nations.

Ann Marie Mehlum '75, PLU's first Fulbright winner, was back on campus for her first Homecoming. Mehlum, CEO of Access Broadcasting, an Internet marketing company in Eugene, Ore., said she didn't realize when she won the Fulbright in 1975 that it was so important.

"It was a fabulous year," she said after hearing the former students speaking. "It was everything they all talked about."

Associate provost Bill Teska said that all international programs have grown at PLU, and they offer core curriculum emphasizing a global perspective. "It is critical to be preparing our students to be global citizens," he said. "We are giving our students the tools they need to navigate through an increasingly interconnected world."

Excerpt of Rodney Swenson's Heritage Lecture:

Language is the key to understanding any given culture, and it is therefore essential that one have some fundamental knowledge of the language before making judgmental observations....Without that...one is likely to make innocuous comments like, "strange," "different," "quaint" or even "cute." No living language exists in a museum, but in an environment that is constantly undergoing evolution. In the language teaching/learning milieu, the word "culture" in written with a lower case [c] and an upper case [C]; the former refers to those cultural behaviors generally acquired through growing up or living...in a particular culture. The other "Culture" refers to knowledge gained primarily through academic study...literature, music, creative and fine art....In one text I noted the statement that language is considered the repository of culture, which would readily indicate the difficulty one would encounter when trying to separate the two. Carlo Goldini stated the foregoing concept succinctly: "He who never leaves his country is full of prejudices."

Your concept of culture has undergone a transformation of unbelievable proportions...for in addition to the kinds of culture I have just mentioned, you have learned the culture of the foreign university...the attitude towards learning....I have heard the comment so often by returning Fulbright students, "I wish I could have stayed abroad longer...I was just beginning to feel linguistically at home and to understand the culture better."

Alum-led choir shines in national spotlight

Gloriana, a 24-voice professional choir conducted and founded by Deuane '75 and Karen (McClellan) Kuenzi '74, will be part of a monumental recording next May. Gloriana will record the choral portion of the new composition "Symphony of Tears," written to commemorate the 1915 genocide of the Armenians by the Turks. While the singers in Gloriana are from around the country, their office is based in Lakewood, Wash.

The work was written by internationally recognized composer Jeff Manookian, who is of Armenian descent. The recording will be conducted by world renowned Maestro Loris Tjeknovarian of the Vienna Philharmonic. The orchestra for the recording will be the Orchestra of St. Gregory, one of the finest professional orchestras in Europe.

Recording is tentatively scheduled for St. John's Cathedral in New York City, known for its magnificent acoustics.

Gloriana was selected after Maestro Tjeknovarian heard a performance by the choir in Lincoln Center several months ago. He agreed to do the recording only if Gloriana would take part.

The choir's most memorable experiences have been appearing on the CBS show "Touched By An Angel," and recording a CD to benefit cancer research, "Songs of America," which was nominated for a Grammy Award.

Gloriana is scheduled to perform on a two-hour Christmas special to be aired on Christmas Eve 2001, in which Karen Kuenzi will have a minor role. Other upcoming projects include performances in New York, Los Angeles and Dallas. Deuane will conduct the Sydney Orchestra and Chorus (Australia) in the Sydney Opera House in 2003.

Alum bridges cultures through teaching

BY KATHERINE HEDLAND '88

Since Everett Lee '87 graduated from PLU, he has taught all over the globe. This time, he is in Saudi Arabia teaching English to members of the Saudi National Guard. Lee has been there since October, working for the Vinnell Corp., an American company that contracts with the Saudi government. Lee has also taught English in China and Japan and was an ESL teacher at Highline Community College in Burien, Wash. He enjoys the traveling and opportunities for learning that teaching abroad offers.

"I enjoy acting as a bridge between myself and other cultures," he said.

Lee had worked with some Arab students at Highline and wanted more exposure to their culture and beliefs.

"I had stereotypes about them that turned out not to be true, and I wanted to go to a place where I could get a better understanding," he said.

While Lee lives on a compound with Americans and other foreign nationals, he must abide by the strict Muslim law of the land. That means there is no alcohol or talking to women in public, and strict monitoring of any materials brought into the country. He also stops teaching during the prayers Muslims offer five times each day.

Lee will have time off to travel, and Istanbul, Egypt and Lebanon are on his itinerary.

While contemplating his move, Lee remembered a history of the Middle East course he took years ago at PLU from Professor Ann Kelleher.

"It was one of my favorite classes," he said. "At the time it didn't occur to me that I would ever go there."

A look back at 30 years...

BY LAURA (RITCHIE) GIFFORD '00

For 30 years, alumni have counted on Scene for the latest information on all things PLU. From the achievements of students and faculty members to births, graduations and other milestones, Scene has helped Lutes stay in contact with their alma mater and the people who made their time at PLU special.

"I think many people view it as their lifeline to the university," said Lauralee Hagen '75, '78, Director of Alumni and Parent Relations. "It's the consistent form of communication with everyone... the one thing that can keep people connected to the university."

"Lost" alumni often call the office with updated contact information when they have stopped receiving Scene. "You may not notice when you don't get the annual giving letter, but you do notice when you don't get Scene," Hagen said.

In three decades, Scene has seen five editors, four PLU presidents, and more class notes than the magazine's many faithful proofreaders wish to contemplate. Contributors have come and gone, and many individuals merit recognition for their dedication to Scene. First and foremost is Jim Peterson, who took the helm during Scene's inaugural issue, and stayed on as editor until 1994. Ken Dunmire's photographs graced Scene's pages until 1995. And the late Harvey Neufeld '54, director of church relations emeritus, wrote his "Travelin' With Harv" column for 22 years.

Richard Jungkuntz, former acting president and longtime provost.

Scene has seen physical changes ranging from paper grade, to print quality and graphic design. The times have changed, and Scene has changed along with them. In the mid-1980s, the magazine's printing process went completely electronic, and today, articles are submitted via email, designed on sophisticated computers and printed on an electronic full-color press. While the style of Scene may have changed, the substance stays strong.

Certain values continue to emerge, year after year: service to the community and to the world, as well as servant leadership; care for the earth and its inhabitants; preparation for the future; seeing and changing the world, both during and after the PLU experience; inquiry into what a Lutheran education is, and why it is important.

In short, PLU has been "Educating for Lives of Thoughtful Inquiry, Service, Leadership and Care" long before the phrase made its way onto the bottom of its letterhead. And for the last 30 years, Scene has chronicled every step.

President Loren Anderson signs his PLU contract in 1992 as regents Bishop David Wold '56 and Frank Jennings look on.

Profiles: 30 Years of alumni dedication

While much of the world measures success in terms of financial "bottom line," Lute successes, as detailed in Scene, are most often measured in terms of service to the community.

Alumni profiles have included such standout Lutes as Maria-Alma Copeland '79, the first African-American woman to be ordained in the American Lutheran Church. The October 1985 Scene described her journey toward this ground-breaking position, explaining how, after 23 years of raising a family and working, Copeland felt a calling to the ministry when her life was spared in a 1972 car accident.

Distinguished Alumnus Award winners are often recognized, not for their prestige or power, but for their excellence in service. In 1975, Jens Knudsen '52 was honored for his accomplishments as a PLU biology professor. He spent more than 8,000 hours producing a series of dioramas for Point Defiance Aquarium, and raised more than $6,000 (through sale of his freelance artwork) that he contributed to the Minority Student Scholarship Fund. In 1985, Dr. Insu Lee '59 was honored for his work with the National Institute of Health and the Food and Drug Administration, studying the impact of chemicals such as Agent Orange. And in 1999, Beverly Hatlen '66 was honored for her work in public health and her efforts in supporting young adults with learning disabilities.

In recent years, the Alumni Board created an additional Alumni Service Award as a way of awarding those who live out PLU's mission of educating for lives of service. This award has honored alumni such as Ron '70 and Ingrid '70 Gintz, recognized in 1999 for providing a home (since 1991) for 25 teenage boys who have struggled with problems such as drug addiction, anger management, conflict with their own parents and failure in school.

Of course, PLU also has graduated its share of alumni who have been successful in the more traditional realms of leadership. 1996 Distinguished Alumnus Donald Morken '60, the owner of Genesee Investments, is known as one of the pioneers in the hedge fund business. He is a sought-after speaker on investment topics, and has been quoted numerous times in the Wall Street Journal and Forbes Magazine.

When the Mortvedt Library was constructed in 1967, building architects gave the two-story structure enough strength to support a third level at some point in the future. By the mid-1980s, the library's collections had outgrown the first two floors. A third story was completed in 1987.

LEFT: Scene makes a habit of sharing interesting stories about current students with its readers. In May 1978, the magazine profiled five Lute football players who made it to television's "The Gong Show" as "The Non-Lettermen," after discovering they could sing at a team camp. Clockwise from left, the "Non-Lettermen" included Mark Reiman '79 (now the chair of PLU's economics department), Kris Morris '80, Mike Catron '78, Mark Accimus '80 and Phil Earley '80.

Staying connected

If nothing else, the editors of Lute publications can be assured of two certainties in life: Mooring Mast readers will always look at the Safety Beat first, and Scene readers will head directly for Class Notes.

Scene readers' fascination with Class Notes is easy to explain. As alumni move away and begin new stages in their lives, keeping in touch becomes more complicated. In a world where it sometimes seems easier to drift apart than stay connected, Class Notes are the glue that binds PLU's alumni community together.

Reviewing the 30 years of marriages and births, job promotions and awards that Scene has chronicled, certain patterns become apparent.

First, PLU is a family institution. Couples have announced marriages and the births of their children—and many of those kids themselves become alumni.

Second, PLU is continually growing. While enrollment grows steadily, the body of those who call themselves "Lutes" grows immensely with every entering class—and accordingly, Class Notes grows longer and richer.

The most enduring pattern that emerges is the strength of the PLU community. Class Notes routinely profile gatherings and events that bring together alumni from 20, 30 or even 50 years ago to catch up on busy lives and remember old times.

Still, alumni like Morken share their fellow Lutes' dedication to service. While Morken has been one of PLU's most generous donors, his devotion of time is even more impressive. He is a PLU regent, a class representative, and a Q Club member. He was the National Chairman of PLU's "Make a Lasting Difference" campaign in the 1990s, and is currently a National Co-Chair of the Steering Committee for "The Campaign for Pacific Lutheran University: The Next Bold Step."

It was hard, almost impossible, to narrow the gigantic list of captivating, touching and inspiring profiles that have graced Scene's pages. PLU should be most proud of that fact.

The late Jens Knudsen '52 devoted over 8,000 hours to creating a series of dioramas for the Point Defiance Aquarium. In February 1973, Scene paid Knudsen a visit as he worked on a scene depicting Cape Flattery.

Always planning for the future

nally built to house the natural sciences, was remodeled and converted into a home for various academic services and the School of Nursing. Ingram Hall, used as a student union and as a headquarters for both the School of Nursing and the art department, today is home to the School of the Arts. The former Parkland School was annexed by the university in the 1980s, and became home to the Marriage and Family Therapy program and several community outreach organizations. PLU added a third floor to the Mortvedt Library in 1987, and it now houses the University archives. Scene's inaugural cover story, the UC, has also seen many changes.

The area that is now the Scandinavian Cultural Center? During construction of the UC in 1970, longtime UC director Marv Swenson noticed the construction crew filling in a large hole on the lower level. When engineers said it wasn't necessary to fill in the hole, Swenson had it left open, and added doors. Despite

Over the years, Scene has chronicled PLU's special effort to remain connected to its Norwegian heritage. On several occasions, members of the Norwegian royal family have come to campus. Here, President Anderson shows the Norwegian crown prince, Haakon, a sculpture on lower campus titled "Generations of Oak" during his visit in 1999. The sculpture, created by Kathryn Wold, was dedicated by his mother, Queen Sonja, in 1995.

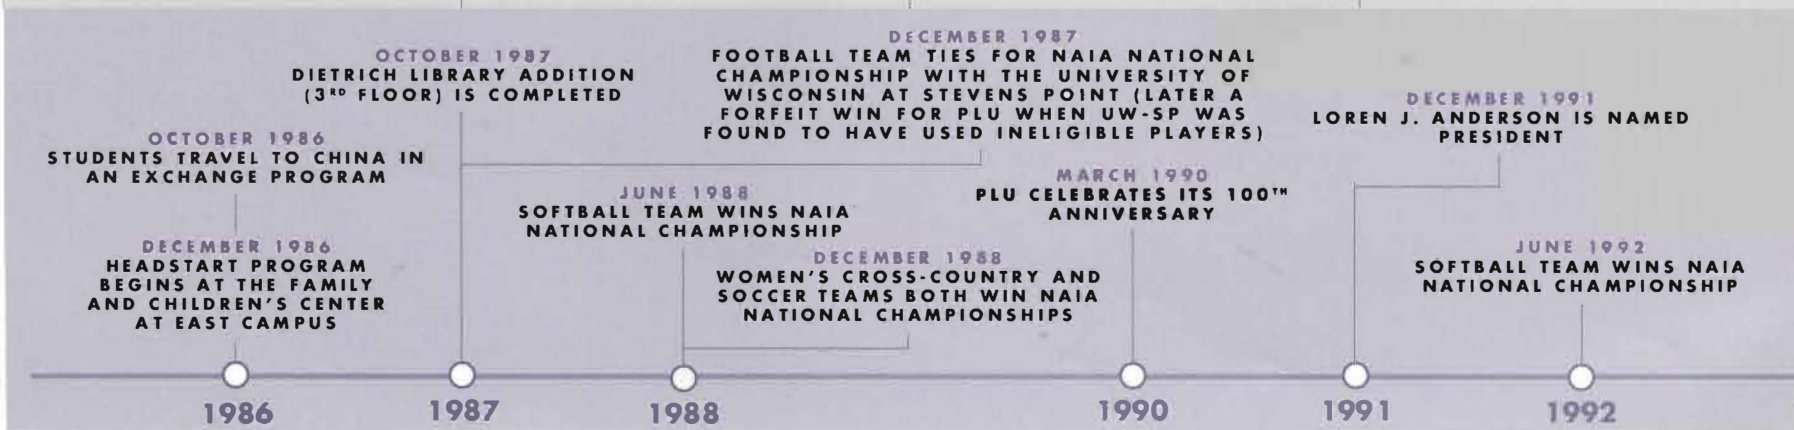

"PLU SPORTED IT'S OWN BOWLING ALLEY UNTIL A LACK OF USE AND A NEED FOR MORE COMPUTER USER ROOMS FORCED A REMODEL."

As Scene has grown and changed throughout the years, so has PLU. Scene began with the very...orange cover of the inaugural issue in September 1970, featuring what was then the newly constructed University Center. More recently, the shiny new W. M. Keck Observatory graced the Winter 1999-2000 cover. And this issue's cover features (along with the history of PLU growth) South Hall, which just opened its doors to students.

In 30 years, the list of new buildings is impressive and varied.

Following the dedication of the UC in November 1970, the next major addition was the Names Fitness Center, which opened in 1984. Rieke Science Center, named for then-President William O. Rieke, was dedicated in January 1985. The '90s saw the dedication of the Mary Baker Russell Music Center in February 1995, and the W. M. Keck Observatory at this fall's Opening Convocation. Finally, South Hall was dedicated during Homecoming weekend this October.

There have also been renovations and additions. Ramstad Hall, origia dirt floor, the space provided valuable storage space during the UC's early years, and was later converted into music practice rooms.

What about the current studio and office space for KCNS Student Television and KCCR Student Radio? When the UC opened its doors, ASPLU occupied the rooms down the hall from the Mooring Mast. One can only imagine what interesting exchanges occurred late at night on the mezzanine level.

The computer center that current students use to type term papers? Until 1992, it was a place to hurl balls at pins on weekends. Yes, PLU sported its own bowling alley until lack of use and a need for more computer user rooms forced a remodel. The computer center opened in 1995.

Now in 2000, PLU awaits completion of the Xavier Hall renovation, a $5 million project the first of three capitol projects funded the Campaign for Pacific Lutheran University: The Next Bold Step. Whatever the future holds, it is certain that new and innovative planning will be reported in Scene.

While always special, national football championships are nothing new to PLU. In March 1981, Scene celebrated the 1980 team's first national title under Frosty Westering. The team and Frosty are pictured with then-President Rieke.

Lute professor-coach chases records past retirement

BY NICK DAWSON

For 30 years, Gary Chase devoted his life to teaching Pacific Lutheran University students how to incorporate physical fitness into everyday life. Now, in what he calls "semi-retirement," Chase is pursuing not only physical fitness, but also world records for his age group in swimming.

This fall, he established a world record in the 100-meter backstroke and a national record in the 50-meter backstroke (for the 60-64 age group) at the Northwest Zone Championships. The "short course" records, set in a 25-meter pool, are 1:12.42 for the 100-meter and 33.83 for the 50-meter backstroke. He broke the former 100-meter record by more than one full second.

"I swim to stay in top condition," says Chase. "I see these times as being outcomes. I'll continue to pursue this, health permitting."

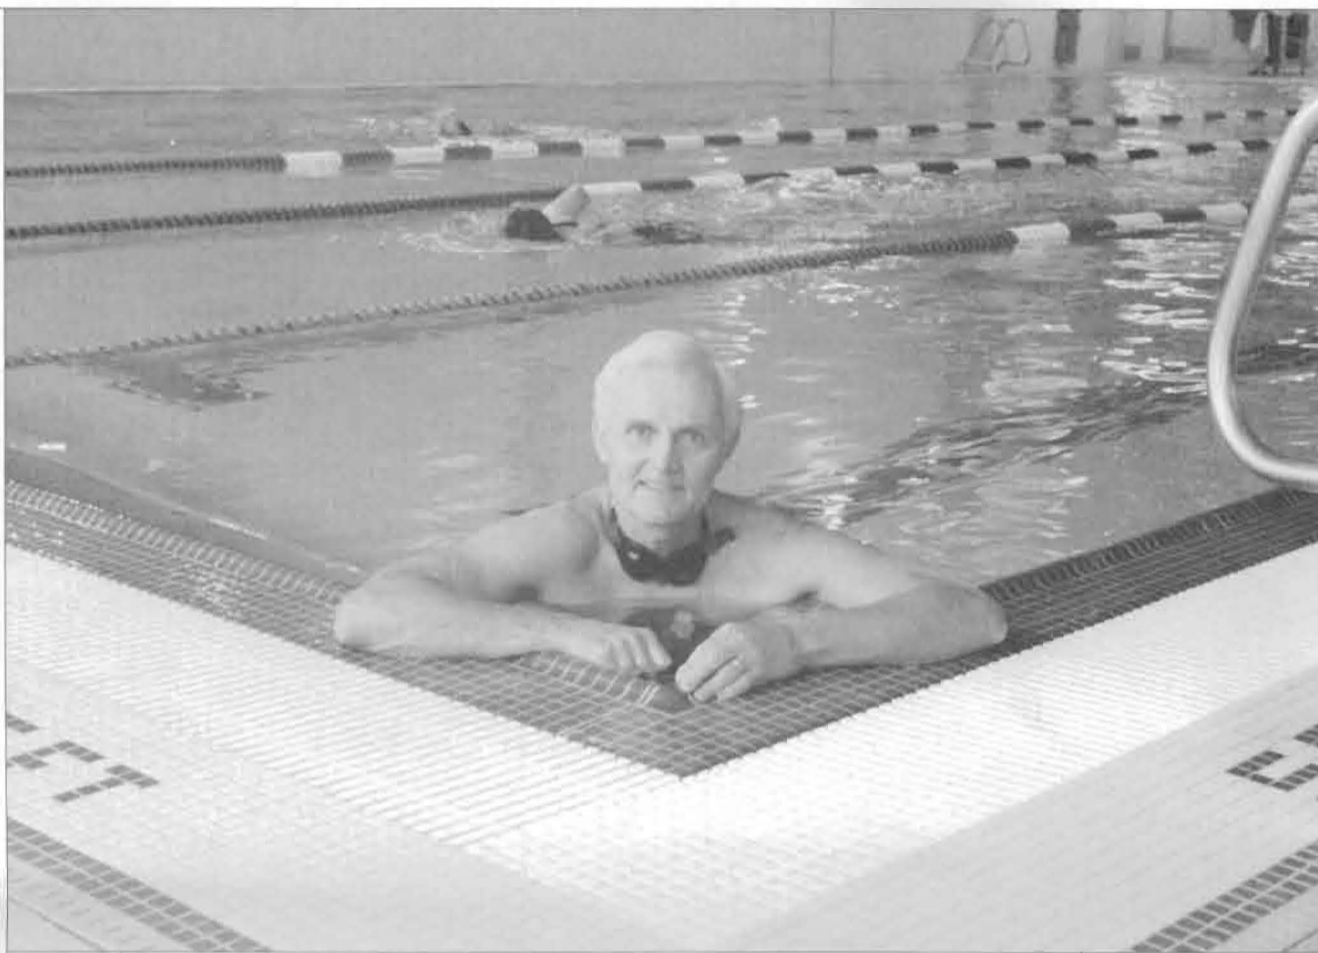

Chase started his pursuit of swimming excellence in his youth. He began swimming competitively when he about 9 years old at the local YMCA. By the time he graduated in 1958 from Aberdeen's Weatherwax High, Chase was a prep standout. He finished second at the state meet in the 100-yard backstroke, and eventually earned an athletic scholarship to Washington State. There he was a three-time Pacific Northwest Conference champion in the 100- and 200-yard backstrokes. He also swam the 200-yard individual medley and established WSU records in all three events. His best event was the 100-yard backstroke—Chase finished sixth at the 1962 NCAA national meet.

Despite his collegiate swimming success, don't expect Chase to swim in the next WSU men's alumni meet—Washington State no longer has men's swimming.

While he was a student athlete at WSU, Chase started what would turn out to be a successful coaching career. Working with young club swimmers in Pullman, Chase helped develop several outstanding athletes, including Mark Mader, who became an All-American at the University of Southern California.

Chase would eventually return to coaching in the 1970s at Pacific Lutheran. Before that, he earned his master's degree in exercise physiology from WSU in 1964. Chase then went to work for Boeing in the Manned Space program, doing research related to the physiology of weightlessness and inactivity of astronauts during prolonged space flight. When the research project was completed, Chase left Boeing and settled with his family in Eugene, Ore., where he became an instructor at Lane Community College, as well as a club swim coach. Later, he moved to Seattle, trained on Wall Street, and became a stock broker and commodities trader. Then, in the early '70s, came the opportunity at PLU.

"I enjoyed the challenge of a completely new career focus, but the opportunity to coach and teach at PLU was the perfect career opportunity," says Chase.

"My field was exercise physiology, and I had a chance to teach that here," says Chase. "This was one of those events in your life that is a very purposeful thing." It was with a "sense of calling" that Chase and his family came to PLU.

Chase served as professor of exercise science and fitness in the School of Physical Education from 1970 until his retirement in 2000. His wife, Sharon, has been on the PLU library staff since 1972 and their sons, Scott and Brian, both graduated from the school. Chase's primary teaching assignment at Pacific Lutheran came with the core class, Personalized Fitness Programs, commonly known as P.E. 100. Chase taught between 300 and 500 students in the course each year.

In addition to his teaching position, Gary served as the Pacific Lutheran swimming coach from 1970-77. His swimming teams won many honors, including men's and women's conference championships each year from 1970-77. In 1973, he was selected as NAIA Coach of the Year after his men's team placed third at the national meet. Under Chase's tutelage, Lute swimmers earned NAIA All-America honors 40 times, including three men who were four-year All-America honorees. Three of his swimmers combined to win a total of six individual event national championships.

Next on Chase's schedule is the 50-meter pool "long course" nationals, set for next August at the King County Aquatic Center in Federal

Way. "We're very fortunate to have this meet in our own backyard," says Chase. "I'm looking at this as a short-term goal. Then I'd like to go to the Masters World Championships in New Zealand in 2002."

There's also the 200-meter backstroke world record to be broken, and Chase is working hard to cut 2.73 seconds off his best time in order to achieve that goal. Some 50 years after getting his start in a YMCA pool, the YMCA remains a part of Chase's life. He now swims 3,400- to 4,300-yard daily workouts at the Puyallup YMCA. Chase says that the distance is half of what most competitive young swimmers log daily. "I've got to be realistic," says Chase. "I'm not a kid anymore."

Still, the goal of a national or world record does entice. Chase says, "If there's a national record out there, it's meant to be broken." He looks at retirement as his opportunity not just break records, but a chance to enjoy new challenges.

"If I had to make a statement of what retirement is, it is productive use of time which leads to life's enjoyments," says Chase. For Gary Chase, swimming is most certainly a part of that.

Parents Council a great tool to help parents make the tough college transition

BY WILLIAM AND ANNE BUCK, PARENTS COUNCIL CHAIRS

In the fall, many parents across the country drop their children off at PLU, as a new chapter of life begins. The PLU environment makes letting go a little easier (although we doubt this is ever easy) through a caring, collaborative community of faculty, staff and administration. One of the most effective organizations in this transition is Parents Council.

For those not familiar with Parents Council, here is a brief summary: Sponsored by the Office of Alumni and Parent Relations, they are a group of volunteer parents and families of PLU students. Parents Council members help the university inform other parents about all aspects of the university, strive to promote the welfare and advancement of the university and encourage members to participate in Council projects.

Some of the activities include serving as hosts in residence halls, sponsoring question-and-answer sessions for parents during new student orientations, phoning new parents in the parent-to-parent calling program and serving as local resources in their communities.

Volunteering for PLU has given Parents the opportunity to stay in touch with their children by giving them first-hand knowledge of campus happenings. It's a great way to be active participants in the community where children are becoming productive adults—but without intruding on their individual growth.

The success of LuteRecruit

You just never know who might become a Lute, thanks to you! The LuteRecruit program really works and Ryan Speier '04 is living proof. Ryan's name came to PLU on a LuteRecruit card, submitted by recent grad, Ashley Orr '00. Thanks to both her volunteer admissions work and the work of PLU's admissions staff, Ryan enrolled at PLU this fall as a freshman. Think of those you might know in your family, your neighborhood or your community that would be a good match for PLU, and submit their names on the postage paid card found in every issue of Scene. Also look for the LuteRecruit form on the Alumni website (www.plu.edu/~arel/lrct\_rfr.html) or call 800-ALUM-PLU.

Community building inspires Q Club volunteer

BY KARA FLEHARTY

Jenny Adams '03, Q Club member

"I'VE BEEN TAUGHT PATIENCE. THROUGH MY PARENTS I'VE LEARNED LIFE ISN'T ABOUT ME, IT'S ABOUT HELPING OTHERS."

—JENNY ADAMS

Giving can mean different things. Jenny Adams '03 believes giving is helping others by "providing all you can for the people around you."

"I learned about giving from my parents," said Adams. "They serve in leadership positions in their church, and operate a Chehalis area clothing bank."

It's not just giving within the community that makes Adam's family unique. In a family of eight children, Adams is one of six adopted with disabilities—she was born with a rare disease that caused her arms and legs not to develop. Adams' older and younger brothers have Down Syndrome, and three other siblings have spastic dysplasia, a condition that affects muscle control. "In our family, there is no separation between disabled and non-disabled," said Adams. "We are a family and are all the same."

Adams, who uses an electric wheelchair, believes her disability has helped mold her into the giving young woman she is today.

"I've been taught patience," Adams said. "Through my parents, I've learned life isn't about me. It's about helping others." As a student attending PLU on financial aid, Adams continues to help others by maintaining a membership in the Q Club.

"People sometimes focus so much on people's needs away from their community that they forget about the community around them," Adams said. "Helping the people around you and seeing them being cared for—that's the direct reward."

Adams, a psychology major, sings in the Chapel Choir, is active in the campus Christian community, and works as a telefund-raiser for the Annual Fund.

"When I'm calling people, I have a connection," she said. "I'm a student, and I give. I'd like others to give, too. It's such a worthy cause."

What's her advice for giving? Give, no matter what the size of the donation is. "Even a small gift can make a big difference. When we all contribute, it adds up."

ALUMNI PROFILE

Bicyclist Bangsund crosses country in 47 days

BY ED LARSON '57

When David Bangsund '71 finished his cross-country bicycle ride, the comment from his wife, Lynne '70, was that "he now has legs of steel!"

An avid bicyclist, Bangsund and other family members have taken numerous biking vacations. But the 47-day trip that he negotiated in May and June was something altogether different.

In late May, Bangsund and more than 50 other bikers waded into the water with their bicycles near Manhattan Beach, Calif., for a "wheel dipping ceremony." Forty-seven days and 3,425 miles later (and 30 pounds lighter!) Bangsund and his cohorts pedaled into Boston, Mass., and submerged their tires in the Atlantic Ocean, thereby completing their cross-country trek. Only two of the original troupe of bikers did not finish, and their failure to complete the monumental journey was due to injuries sustained along the way.

The bikers came from many countries—Canada, England, Germany, Wales, Japan, New Zealand and the United States. While the bicyclists' ages were mostly in the 60s, there was one woman in her early 20s who was just out of college, as well as a 77-year-old man who had navigated the lengthy trip several times before.

Among the riders were three college professors, a priest, several attorneys, a youth minister and a woman who sells vintage clothing. She managed to purchase more than 250 old hats as she traveled through the countryside.

The bikers were accompanied by CrossRoads, a group that provides support, emergency help, and other services, such as hotel booking, along the way.

The greatest challenges facing the bikers included the heat of Southern California and New Mexico, thunderstorms in the Midwest, the many ups and downs of hills and mountain passes in Arizona, and the constant pressure of auto drivers and truckers who begrudged having to share the road with bicyclists.

On the other hand, Bangsund pointed out that the steep climbs were somewhat counter-balanced by the "free ride" that the downhill portions provided. A highlight of the trip was when the bikers were allowed to ride around the Indianapolis Speedway in Indiana.

When asked whether he would undertake such a trip again, Bangsund said: "Probably not that particular ride again... but I would be open to something similar."

Then, on the weekend following his return to his home in Portland, Ore., Bangsund hopped on his bicycle and rode the 100 miles to Olympia, Wash., to visit some friends!

Washington State Patrol meets PLU twofold

Sgt. Roger Kreis and his wife, Sandra

There's a benign blurring of the rules that govern the separation of church and state when it comes to marriage, particularly in the case of two State Patrol officers and their wives.

The exception came to light in a recent issue of Inside/Out, the newsletter that is published by the Washington State Patrol. The topic? The coincidence that two WSP officers—Sgt. Roger Kreis and Lt. Gale Otto—each married PLU graduates who are also Lutheran church ministers.

Kreis, a WSP evidence control officer and supervisor of the audit section of the Office of Professional Standards, is married to Sandra (Bowdish '65), pastor of Our Saviour's Lutheran Church in Aberdeen, Wash.

Otto, assistant District 8 commander assigned to Bremerton, Wash., is married to Janis '77, pastor of the Key Peninsula Lutheran Church near Key Center, Wash.

Aside from the WSP connection, the women's lives have crossed in other ways. Janis was ordained in 1989 at a church in Puyallup, Wash., while at the same time Sandra served as pastor of another Puyallup congregation. Janis served five years as interim pastor of several Northwest congregations, one of which was the same Our Saviour's Church in Aberdeen. There, she preceded Sandra in the ministry. Both women also received master of divinity degrees from Pacific Lutheran Seminary in Berkeley, Calif.

The Kreis' children are following their parents' career paths. Daughter Joanna '97 serves as a church youth director in Tacoma. Their son, Jacob, a Washington State University graduate, is a Pierce County sheriff's deputy.

PACIFIC LUTHERAN UNIVERSITY
HONOR ROLL OF DONORS
 1999-2000

In previous years, the Annual Report was PLU's opportunity to list all those who have generously donated to the university. This year, PLU wanted to make the list available to an even larger audience—those who read Scene magazine. While the forthcoming Annual Report will detail PLU's successes over the last fiscal year, the Honor Roll of Donors will focus on those who have donated to PLU.

In this report, PLU recognizes all members of the Lifetime Giving Society, the Heritage Society and the Q Club, as well as all donors who made gifts between June 1, 1999 and May 31, 2000. All contributors are listed once, in alphabetical order, with a key for the different giving organizations.

Lifetime Giving Society

The Lifetime Giving Society recognizes an extraordinary group of donors who have given faithfully and consistently over time to sustain and support Pacific Lutheran University. Lifetime giving includes the total recorded gifts and current pledges of cash, securities, real estate, and appreciated property, and includes the charitable value of irrevocable planned gifts. These totals do not include revocable deferred gifts or gifts to KPLU.

Heritage Society

Heritage Society members have remembered PLU in their estate planning through a type of deferred gift, bequest, charitable trust, revocable trust, charitable gift annuity, life insurance, pooled income fund agreement, or a gift of residence or farm with retained life estate. Membership is not based on the amount of the deferred gift. These contributions are very important to Pacific Lutheran University's long-term future, with gifts ranging from $5,000 or less to $5 million and more.

Q Club

With a minimum contribution of $300 annually (student giving levels begin at $60 a year), one can join this gathering of dedicated friends whose mission is to provide assistance to deserving students as they prepare for lives of service through a Pacific Lutheran University education. Q Club is the "giving club" of PLU's annual fund, and the more than 2,000 members provide the core of scholarship support.

Matching Gift Program

The Matching Gift Program recognizes Companies and Foundations who have contributed to PLU by matching the gifts of their employees. This support is either designated to a particular fund identified by the employee or given to the unrestricted fund.

Independent Colleges of Washington

Designation is for individuals, companies and foundations who have contributed to PLU by making contributions through the Independent Colleges of Washington. ICW supports private higher education in Washington state by soliciting unrestricted gifts from many individuals, businesses and foundations.

Kudos for first online donor!

Amy (Nance) Cebull '93, recently became the first person to donate to Pacific Lutheran University through our new secured server at the PLU development website: www.plu.edu/~devel. Cebull, who lives in Billings, Mont., finds the website to be a helpful way to keep in touch with her alma mater, and was especially pleased to learn that she could use her credit card to make her Q Club contribution. "I, like so many of my friends, am using the Internet to simplify my life. This includes shopping, banking, getting news and information, keeping in touch with friends and family and making gifts to PLU!" Amy and her husband, Brian, a Stanford University alumnus, feel strongly about supporting their alma maters, though Amy admits, "PLU gets a little more because we both feel that our gifts really do make a difference to the students at Pacific Lutheran University!"

Amy Cebull, '93 was the first online donor at PLU.

Tire store gives more than great service

Not far from campus, at 10805 Pacific Ave. S., sits Tiny's Tires, a local automotive business that has been a long-time Pacific Lutheran University supporter. Started in 1965, Tiny's Tires has been providing service to the Parkland community 35 years.

Service and maintenance are not the only goals of Tiny's Tires. In addition to supporting area high schools and youth programs since 1979, Tiny's Tires has helped provide PLU students with a quality education through membership in the Q Club. Co-owner Curtis Martin said, "We have always supported PLU in the past. PLU people have done so much business with us and have been great to work with."

Founded in 1972, Q Club provides the core of Annual Fund support at PLU. With a minimum annual contribution of $300 ($25/month) Q Club members help provide assistance to deserving students as they prepare for lives of service through a PLU education.

"PLU is a great part of the community," Martin continued. "We like to help out any way we can."

For information on ways that you or your business can support the Q Club, please contact Kara Fleharty, associate director of annual giving and Q Club, at 253-535-7439 or 800-258-6758.

PLU School of Education students work with a PLU-provided Apple iMac laptop in the Pederson/Stein Technology Enhanced Classroom.

Innovation in the classroom

Students in PLU's School of Education are developing as skilled users of technology in large measure because of alumnus Diana Pederson '83. Pederson gave a generous gift to the School of Education that funded much of the equipment that puts students ahead of the curve, and allowed the creation of the Pederson/Stein Technology Enhanced Classroom—in honor of her grandfather, Arne Pederson, and Lynn Stein, faculty emeriti in the School of Education.

South Hall opens its doors

South Hall, PLU's newest campus residence, opened its doors to students on August 31. The facility offers a variety of living arrangements, including studio, two- and four-bedroom apartments, two-bedroom townhouses, one-bedroom lofts and one five-bedroom townhouse.

South Hall is geared toward older students who would like the convenience of a campus residence, but are interested in the privacy and independence of an apartment with separate kitchen and bathroom facilities. All residents are at least 20 years of age or have junior standing, and married students are able to apply for residence in the one-bedroom loft apartments.

South Hall's success in serving this category of students is apparent in the newest figures for on-campus residents at PLU; the percentage of students living in university housing rose this year to 45 percent, up from 41 percent in 1999-2000.

Educating for lives of service

Lutheran education values life in the world. The church's emphasis on stewardship of the Earth and on educating for lives of service dictates a practical concern that looks beyond the university to the needs of local and global communities. In the Lutheran tradition, all of life is vocation. People are called upon to live as persons of faith with deeply held values, and a commitment to service—whatever their chosen profession.

Fully one-third of PLU graduates enter the helping professions—teaching, nursing, social work, medicine, parish ministry—often carrying the ethic of service to the highest levels of achievement. Graduates pursuing careers outside the service sector continue to devote time to their communities.

This holistic, integrated approach to education remains the cornerstone of Pacific Lutheran University.

PLU Physics Professor and W. M. Keck Observatory project coordinator, Steve Starkovich.

W. M. Keck Observatory

More direct study of the earth and the sky by PLU students has been the result from a $500,000 grant from The W. M. Keck Foundation—to the university and through the Division of Natural Sciences. Student research opportunities are greatly enhanced through state-of-the-art tools and facilities.

The recently opened W. M. Keck Foundation Observatory is one of the tools that have opened these new opportunities to PLU students. The observatory features a 16-inch Schmidt-Cassegrain reflecting telescope (one of the largest in the region), a 17-foot retractable dome, a large-format digital camera for research activities, and five 8-inch telescopes on permanent piers for educational use. Astrometric position observations of known asteroids, as well as the search for new ones, will be the principal research at the observatory.

Established in 1954 by W. M. Keck, the foundation makes grants designed to provide far-reaching benefits for humanity in the fields of science, engineering and medical research. The foundation also wishes to ensure that today's youth receive a high quality, well-rounded education. To that end, it supports programs designed to promote innovative instruction and research at leading liberal arts colleges across the nation.

Xavier Hall revitalized

Xavier Hall is undergoing a complete revitalization. The $5 million project includes $3.5 million for construction and $1.5 million for endowment to support academic programs and new technology in the facility.

The renovation will focus on interior remodeling and expanding the existing four classrooms, lecture hall and laboratory to nine classrooms, including two smart classrooms, a new anthropology laboratory, and the new Philip Nordquist Lecture Hall. Faculty office space will also be remodeled.

Formerly the university Library, Xavier Hall was built in 1937. The renovation project is part of the $100 million Campaign for Pacific Lutheran University: The Next Bold Step.

Alumni and Parent Leadership Campaign

Clark and Rae Peters, proud past Lute parents, Parent's Council past chairs, Alumni Leadership campaign chairs and supporters of the Q Club enjoy a Saturday afternoon watching Lute football. Although their children graduated several years ago, the Peters continue to attend many PLU football games, traveling from their home in Milwaukee, Ore. The Alumni and Parent Leadership campaign goal was $4 million and thanks to your generous contributions, more than $7.2 million has been raised!

Julia Pomerenk '83 and her dog, Hope.

THERE ARE THREE OTHER WAYS THAT WE CAN BE PULLED BY HOPE INTO EACH NEW DAY. SCRIPTURE CAN PULL US. SO CAN SONGS. SO CAN SUPPORT FROM OUR SISTER AND BROTHER BELIEVERS. OUR HOPE MAY BE SO STRONG THAT WE BECOME AS EAGER FOR OUR FAITH "WALKS" AS MY DOG HOPE IS FOR HERS. WE MAY EVEN DANCE AS HOPE DOES.

I have a dog named Hope. We go for walks every day. She is always eager for her walks, stretching by the window and dancing by the front door. She wiggles and waits for me to attach her leash to her collar. Once we get out the door, I am literally pulled by Hope every day.

There are three other ways that we can be pulled by hope into each new day. Scripture can pull us. So can songs. So can support from our sister and brother believers. Our hope may be so strong that we become as eager for our faith "walks" as my dog Hope is for hers. We may even dance as Hope does.

Scripture

Scripture from the first chapter of I Peter announces hope as God's great merciful gift to us. Verse three states: "By his great mercy he has given us a new birth into a living hope through the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead." This hope is the stuff of life and death and resurrection, and you can't get much stronger than that! This hope is powered by resurrection. And comes with double death-defying visions: new birth and a living hope. God knows that we are bruised by death, so God gives us a new birth into a living hope.

God gives us this gift of hope every day, and as many times a day as we need. We get to begin again. Do over. Grab the gift of a new birth into a living hope.

Song

Every day, hope can pull at us by songs we hear and sing. Do you have songs in your head? Words and tunes that come to you when you need them? Tunes that can carry you? Songs that create for you a new heart and renewed hope?

Ever since I can remember, my family has sung "Children of the Heavenly Father." We sing the hymn at baptisms, funerals, weddings and even on ordinary days—whenever we want to remember the layered memories of that melody.

One afternoon we hadn't remembered to sing our song. We had been talking in lowered tones in my Aunt Esther's kitchen. Esther was in the downstairs bedroom. She was just days away from death. We didn't feel like singing. Then we heard the voice of Sigi, her pastor, singing our song for Esther, and for us. We heard our suffering and our rejoicing being sung for us. "Though he giveth or he taketh, God his children ne'er forsaketh."

I am glad to have the hope of that song in my heart.

Support

When I picture the support of the faith community, I see the circle of the faithful gathered at Trinity Lutheran Church in Pullman, Wash., and Paul Klavano, a longtime member, giving me hope through hugging.

Paul is an elder of the faith and a giver of bear hugs. With delight and with years of hugging experience, Paul and I prepare for the hug itself, with steps as established as an Olympic athlete's warm-up. We place ourselves directly in front of each other and stretch out our arms to be sure to have sufficient space for full arm extension. Then Paul rubs his hands in anticipation, and the hug commences. Paul all but picks me up and off my feet when he hugs me. I hold the feel of a Paul Klavano bear hug in my memory as a strong image of the support I can claim from my brothers and sisters in faith. We're almost dancing at the front door—we are pulled by hope with a hug.

My hope for us all is that we embrace this gift that God gives us: a new birth into a living hope. May we take the gift, given through mercy and grace, and walk with hope.

When I take my dog Hope for a walk, she pulls on her leash. As she pulls me past people, they often ask: "Who's walking who?" I usually respond with the expected answer: "She's walking me." As I begin again, walking with hope, may I respond with the unexpected answer: "Hope is pulling me." May hope pull us all.
