FOLK SINGER KAY BRITTEN NEXT ARTIST SERIES ATTRACTION

Kay Britten, internationally-famous folk-singing star, will appear in concert in the Eastvold Chapel auditorium at 8:15 p.m. Tuesday, March 29, as part of the PLU Associated Students Artist Series.

Miss Britten, who has delighted audiences on both sides of the Atlantic with her programs of songs from countries all over the world, is recognized as one of the foremost authorities on folk music of our day.

Unlike the barefoot-beatnik folk singer so popular in America today, Miss Britten performs in a wardrobe of designer fashions created by the famous houses of the United States and Europe.

She boasts one of the most extensive repertoires of folk songs and ballads of any folk artist and changes her program from one performance to the next, according to the tastes of her audience.

Born and educated in Somerset, England, she studied voice in London at the Royal College of Music. Her interest in Elizabethan and early English music led to the discovery of folk songs.

She soon found herself so absorbed in the study and collecting of the traditional ballad that she decided to devote herself to it, using this material in concerts in England. She later came to the United States, presenting her folk songs to clubs and concert audiences.

In Detroit where she now lives with her physician husband and two children, she has made many TV and radio appearances, including her own TV program of folk songs and a year or daily appearances on a show "mostly for women."

She writes many songs of her own, especially songs of political and social satire.

She particularly enjoys the singing she does with children in schools, including some interesting experiments in the use and adaptation of folk songs and tales for the very young children.

In the last few years she has been building what she hopes will be a comprehensive library on the traditional ballad and collecting rare and antique books in the field.

PLOWSHARES, 1966 STYLE

"They shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks..." is part of a quotation from Isaiah II, 4.

The citizens of the Calabrian village of San Leo in Italy have a new application of this verse, according to the Associated Press. They have petitioned the Italian Ministry of Defense for the gift of an old cannon- any old cannon.

The good folk of San Leo don't want to be bard anyone. They want to melt the gun down to get metal for a church bell, not having enough money to buy one.

From the roar of the cannon to the bell's peal for canonical instruction seems a fitting thought in this case.
